*A family film means a film wholesome enough for family entertainment, but not necessarily appropriate for children unaccompanied by adults.
EDITORIAL

We are often asked whether or not we are really accomplishing anything, whether or not we really consider our work worth while. With the beginning of the new year it seems appropriate that we should look backward as well as forward and try if possible to determine whether or not we have been on the right track and if it is wise to continue in the same line of endeavor.

In the whole field of striving towards better pictures and the protection of youth against the subversive influences of bad pictures, ours is only one organization doing a specialized type of work. The past year has seen a surprising growth of activity among all kinds of groups and a tremendous amount of publicity both intelligent and mistaken a propos of the public indignation against improper films. We are hopeful to note that the public has at last become aroused to the need for action but fearful also lest, like other popular cries, the clamor for a change will soon quiet down because people will join some newer crusade in the belief that they have already accomplished their purpose.

No matter what may be the quality of the new pictures there will always be the necessity for intelligent choice among types of film entertainment especially for those whose minds are immature and who have not yet learned by experience what to reject as false. In the past twelve months we have reviewed 3532 feature films. Only 132 of these are by any stretch of imagination suitable for children or adolescents under sixteen. This does not mean that we would care to see the other 220 films denied to adult audiences. Many of the pictures are fine, others of course properly belong in the trash barrel, but with such a comparatively small amount of family entertainment available it seems imperative that the public should continue to demand more of this type and that they should take care to use some reliable guide when selecting pictures for the young people for whose character development they are responsible.

Believing in this necessity we shall continue to furnish such a guide, to work towards the education of adults concerning the importance of discriminating selection of the films they attend, and to cooperate with better film councils, research committees and educational groups to further the cause of more and better family pictures.

How much we can accomplish only time will tell. In the interests of almost any cause it is possible to rouse the public to follow a popular leader, but the task of teaching them to think for themselves seems to require more wisdom than any human agent can offer.—D. J. C.

WHAT MOVIES FOR CHILDREN?

"An adult is a free agent but our children need protection" is a cryptic sentence to be found in the conclusion of a report on "Certain Attitudes of Elementary Children Toward Motion Pictures" published in the August, 1934, California Journal of Education. The article is well worth reading. The study was carried out by a committee appointed by California State Superintendent Kersey, and the summary is made by Mrs. Gladys L. Potter, Assistant Chief, Division of Elementary Education and Rural Schools. Although there was no attempt to make the study a highly scientific one, it was done to get informally the reactions, likes and dislikes, of children to specific movies in order to stimulate parents and teachers alike to the tremendous importance of motion pictures in their out of school influence on children's development. The attitude of these California children is probably not very different from children elsewhere, so that their opinions may at least stimulate others to question what movies they are allowing their young children to see. One point, well brought out by the writer, is that this study, as well as others made in other sections of the country, proves that "lack of other types of entertainment in the home is evidenced by the attendance and interest of children in motion pictures."

Such a report could be invaluable as a suggestion also to producers who now claim that they wish to cater to the tastes of children in family films. As a rule they seem to be woefully ignorant of child psychology and apparently think that it exists only in the minds of professors, and has no relation to a child's development outside the covers of a text book. The outward appearance of children pouring out of a junior matinee, for example, offers little significance to a casual onlooker or to a theater manager who probably only hopes that the noise and hilarity have been concentrated for the week at that one performance. Mothers and teachers do, or should, understand the deeper meaning of the behavior problems presented. In my opinion one of the most important reactions learned from the fifth grade pupils, specifically from the boys, was that they like "adventure and excitement" best but that there is a tendency to dislike pictures that are terrorizing. In their own words they object to "spooky" suggestions as much as they do to "too much love."

In last month's bulletin are two reviews of films which are generally heralded because of their suitability for children. "Babes in Toyland" was a frank gesture to attract children and the other, "Sequoia," should have had the appeal for these young audiences which it undoubtedly will have for older ones. Both films in my opinion, have dangerously terrorizing suggestions.

Fantasy and fairy tales should take one into a lovely world of unreality where everyday human problems fade away and where a child is safe from anything which even resembles his acquaintance with the world as he sees it. If the producers of "Babes in Toyland" had appreciated this they would never have had crocodiles snapping at lovely little Bo-Peep or have had the boogy men so closely resemble grinning apes with their horrid, hairy arms and tusk-like teeth viciously implying physical danger. These creatures chase the loved characters through underground caverns, they crash the gates of Toyland, carry away screaming children who live in the Shoe and create fear and havoc everywhere. It would have taken more imagination and skill to create boogy men who were too fantastic to be real, who caused laughter by their absurdities and who made the figures of toyland shake in terror but at whom children could laugh a little as too outrageous to frighten anyone but Mickey Mouse, the Three Little Pigs and Mother Goose characters. It can be done. Walt Disney can do it now, but apparently no one else.

"Sequoia" has some of the loveliest scenes of wild animal life ever screened. The idea of friendship between natural enemies is intriguing, and children would profit by the experience of seeing these graceful, beautiful animals apparently so unconscious that their actions are being photographed for other's pleasure. But to satisfy the producer's idea of "drama and conflict," human villainy is exaggerated, danger to these loved animals becomes almost unbearable and the climax—a fight between a man and a puma—is prolonged until it is too emotional an experience for any younger child, the very audience for whom so much of the picture is ideal.

Producers are releasing more pictures which are definitely made for family trade and which can be recommended for their moral qualities and frequently for their artistic and intellectual attributes as well. Better films committees are increasingly alert to list these pictures for the audiences which wish to patronize them. But where are the pictures to which we may safely take children? Certainly "Babes in Toyland" was an attempt to reach them. Producers say that pictures made for children fail. Why not, when the very basis of their likes and dislikes is ignored? When adventure in pictures must mean bloodshed and death to animals or men; when fairy tales must hold menace in the form of human terror; and when love appears only as passion, and luxury and social graces connote the ideal of success in life. There is little magic in pictures for children except in these out of the Disney Studio, and younger children are denied them because they are lost to them on the double bills in adult theatres.

The article published in the California Journal of Elementary Education goes on to state that the question was asked the children, "What have you learned from the movies?" The answer repeated most frequently was, "What I would like to be." How many heros or heroines of movies which you have seen would you select as your child's ideal? Do you think "the happy day-dreams children enjoy as they imagine themselves in the hero roles are conducive to normal adjustments to life as it is"—L. O. V.

THE ADVENTURE GIRL

The supposedly authentic but seemingly improbable adventures of the crew of the "Black Hawk" on a voyage to Guatemala, are pictured in this travelogue. Joan Lowell, who wrote the book from which the travelogue was made, accompanies the picture with an informal discourse, explaining the hardships and thrilling adventures encountered on the voyage. A battle between a snake and a mongoose, a terrific storm at sea, hostile natives and the search for a fabulous emerald are some of the exciting ingredients. Whether truth or fiction it is an entertaining yarn.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL

Much ado about whether or not to publish the diary of a girl artist who has startled the world with her reputed love affairs. Ann Harding, always lovely, is her charming self, though somewhat miscast as a lady with a sensational reputation. Robert Montgomery, of the winning smile, plays the part of a misanthropic young man, and Edward Everett Horton is rather less funny than usual. The picture suffers from an unnecessary amount of dialogue and lack of action but may have been better as a play. It is superficially entertaining, pleasant, but a disappointing medium for a talented cast.

BACHELOR OF ARTS

The picture deserves credit for its omission of the time-worn athletic encounters and chorus girl co-eds, even though it falls somewhat short of a realistic conception of college life. It is a light romance of a gilded Freshman who is saved from the error of his ways, hardened and strengthened by a worth while college girl. Buildings and grounds of Pomona College lend a delightful atmosphere.

BEHOLD MY WIFE

In this melodramatic tale, a young waster from New York marries a full-blooded Indian girl in order to revenge himself upon his parents, and when she miraculously proves a social success, it all winds up in a shooting affray. Artificial, exaggerated and sordid, the film is not suitable for adolescents and has little to offer for a mature mind.

BROADWAY BILL

Although this whole film concerns simple, ordinary affairs, there is not a commonplace scene or incident in it, perhaps because the director has a close touch on the pulse of life. The subject is timely, as horse racing has been steadily gaining in popularity, and the real hero of the film is the horse, "Broadway Bill." There is strong pathos, also a good deal of fun, and the rather large cast is uniformly good, but it is the feeling of reality conveyed by the director which makes the production unusual.

BRIGHT EYES

Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Lois Wilson, Judith Allen. Direction by David Butler. M-G-M.

Little Shirley Temple is an enchanting child and an amazingly good actress whose presence in any picture guarantees its success. Her already enthusiastic public will be gratified that this time she appears in a film without crooks and with an entirely wholesome... story. The plot, although somewhat overdrawn, adheres to a pattern which has long been popular in children's books and which contains enough humor and sentiment to hold the interest of adults. The Shirley of the picture lives in the household of some impossibly hard-hearted, vulgar rich. Their enfant terrible is an amusing contrast to the angelic Shirley, and their crochety rich old uncle is the fairy godfather of the happy ending. Delightful sequences of the film show Shirley as the pet of the Glendale airport where she goes daily to see her father's aviator pal. The tragedy which makes Shirley an orphan may be too realistically presented for emotional children but we believe that for others the winsome gaiety of the little heroine will obscure the sadder incidents and leave a happy impression.

Robert Young, Stuart Erwin, Ted Healy, Leo Carrillo, Betty Furness. From the story "Backfield" by Cryon Morgan and J. Robert Brem. Direction by Russell Mack. M-G-M.

This is a good, ethically sound football story which follows the careers of four boys from the day they are paroled by a wise and sympathetic juvenile court judge, through high school and college, when they are under the guidance of a splendid sportsman who is their coach and friend. The plot, if somewhat involved at times and a little tiresome (for adults), bases its sequence of events upon the emotions of the characters in a way that seems logical and plausible. This is an agreeable change from the many stories which depend entirely upon chance. The boys are well cast, and the authentic football scenes which are fitted into the action should give the picture special interest to followers of the sport.

THE CHURCH MOUSE
Laura LaPlante, Ian Hunter, Edward Chapman. Direction by Monty Banks. Warner Bros. (British studio.)

Laura LaPlante, as a plump, serious-minded, unadorned little typist out of work, introduces herself, by an amusing ruse, into the employ of a bank president, a man who is a human dynamo at business and equally intensive in his play time. She becomes indispensable to him as secretary and learns how to attract his attention otherwise as well. There are interesting directorial touches to show the development of business efficiency during the passing years, and the opening scenes are clever and entertaining. But on the whole it is only a fair program film, slow and unoriginal in its unfolding.

THE CURTAIN FALLS

A passée actress, sorely pressed for funds, masquerades as a noblewoman and straightens out the domestic troubles of the family she visits. While her methods are not always ethical, there is an air of humanness about the role Miss Crosman so admirably plays which disarms criticism. The theme is not hackneyed, and the picture is entertaining in a quiet way.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN

Here is jolly, wholesome entertainment which we like to think typical of Will Rogers. It tells the story of county politics of thirty years ago, ridiculing the methods of that day and giving Mr. Rogers a role in which he gets the most out of the amusing lines of the play and adds a few of his own bits of humor. An exciting pursuit provides an hilarious climax to a film which should have great appeal to family audiences.

DAVID COPPERFIELD

Freddy Bartholomew, Frank Lawton, W. C. Fields, Roland Young, Maureen Sullivan, Edna May Oliver, Madge Evans, Lionel Bar- more, Lewis Stone. From the novel by Charles Dickens, adapted by Hugh Walpole. Direction by George Cukor. M-G-M.

If Charles Dickens himself had supervised every rehearsal, it is doubtful if the book could have come to life more authentically than it does in the film version of "David Copperfield." Perhaps all the people in the cast are lovers of Dickens; surely it would seem so. Little Freddy Bartholomew is quaintly English; he carries one with him so completely that one sees the world through his eyes; one suffers with him as he fights gallantly against hardships almost too great for a small boy to bear, and one meets all the strange and interesting people of his life. Frank Lawton takes up the part with equal sincerity to portray the David grown to manhood. There are dear old Peggy, grand, lovable Mr. Peggy, Micaswar himself—surely W. C. Fields has never done so fine a characterization before. There is Uriah Heep portrayed to the essence of his villainous, humble soul by Roland Young; there is eccentric Miss Trotwood, and all the others. And it is the England of Dickens' time. If it seems a little long one must remember that it is a long book, and there is not a person or a scene one would wish to have deleted. Those to whom the story is new will find a score of new acquaintances, and those who loved the book will be delighted to spend an evening once again with old friends.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE

Aside from the fact that it introduces a new kind of detective to the screen, this is an unimportant picture. "Father Brown," a character created by Gilbert K. Chesterton in his short stories and ably acted in this film by Walter Connolly, is a genial, astute priest who exerts his influence to reform a thief whom he catches. Because there is not enough interest in the plot for a good detective story the whole responsibility for making the picture entertaining descends upon Walter Connolly. He succeeds fairly well but one wishes he had had a better vehicle.

GRAND OLD GIRL

This sentimental social drama revolves so completely around May Robson's characterization that it is her picture throughout, and she again portrays her role with great ability. Because of her it is interesting. It is a story of pathos and disappointment in which an aging school teacher fights to protect her pupils from unwholesome after-school activities. She fails to get the support of her community and school board, and yet in a measure, is rewarded for her inspiring vision of courageous service. The charm of the story lies in incidental contacts which are part of the teacher's daily problems and in her character and delicious sense of humor. It is family fare of the Will Rogers type.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN

Jean Muir, Franchot Tone, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak. Based on the story "Just Out of College" by Robert Lee Johnson. First National.

Here is a clever, vital story of contemporary life. Depicting the tragedies and disappointments of four college graduates for the first time confronted with the real problems of life, it is rather sombre in tone, but it also offers a hopeful and satisfying picture of the loyalty and courageous perseverance of these young men against disheartening odds. It is sincerely presented and has refreshingly little of the sophistication usually deemed inevitable wherever modern young people are shown on the screen.

HELLDORADO

A light and amusing tale of a motley group of tourists driving to Los Angeles, who become stranded after a cloud burst in an old gold mining ghost town. Due to unusual and exciting circumstances they find the even tenor of their way considerably altered after the experience. The storm scene is especially well done and the ending entirely in accord with accepted melodrama.

I AM A THIEF

In this "Philo Vance" story an insurance company seeks to discover the identities of a ring of gem thieves who are operating in and out of Paris. Some famous diamonds disappear, there are several murders and a near train wreck, and the detective falls in love with one of the thieves. Until almost the end the guilty appear innocent and many of the innocent appear guilty which is desirable in a mystery story, but the plot is sometimes almost too confusing. The suspense is excellently maintained and enough thrills are provided to make exciting entertainment.

THE LAST GENTLEMAN

Compared with Mr. Arliss' more significant roles the eccentric "last gentleman" is a little disappointing. We like best to watch him directing the destinies of countries, saving great corporations from ruin. In this picture he confines his energies to pitting one relative against another in a whimsical plot to determine to whom to leave his fortune. Mr. Arliss, however, endows the character of lovely erratic Cabot Barr with remarkable life and genuineness, and though the story has no great weight the picture is delightfully diverting family entertainment.

Twenty cadets from an American battleship devise a lottery whereby the winning youth is entitled to twenty thousand francs to be spent in entertaining the reigning favorite of the Parisian stage. When the shyest one of the crowd draws the lucky ticket, the others proceed to coach him in his part. Good photography heightens the Continental atmosphere of this musical comedy and the theme song is catchy, while the spontaneous participation of all members of the cast make it a carefree picture which somehow avoids the vulgarities that might easily characterize such a plot.

THE MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD
Claude Rains, Joan Bennett, Lionel Atwill. From the play by Jean Bart. Direction by Edward Ludwig. Universal.

Following on the heels of the senatorial investigations of the war-time profits of munitions manufacturers and the articles which have appeared recently in various magazines accusing munitions manufacturers of promulgating wars, this picture which deals with the same problem, should attract the thoughtful attention of the public. It is, however, much more than a propaganda picture and is no mere assembling of sensational disclosures. It is a tense, dramatic and desperately tragic story, the product of superb acting and direction. It tells how a man who has allowed himself to be influenced into betraying his country "reclaims his head" by exacting a fearful punishment from the unscrupulous person who has caused him to lose his integrity and self esteem.

MUSIC IN THE AIR

A light-hearted musical comedy, with a pleasant, simple story and picturesque settings and costumes. It tells of a sentimental German composer, his pretty daughter and her village sweetheart, who journey to Munich to try to get a song published. Here they meet a well-known producer of operettas and his famous wife, a singer, whose temperaments clash (somewhat tiresomely for audience enjoyment). The village sweetheart's path of true love meets with temporary difficulties. There are some charming bits, and Douglas Montgomery gives a delightful impersonation of the schoolmaster. It is good entertainment if one is not too exacting as to plot and music.

MILLS OF THE GODS

May Robson as a widowed mill owner is confronted with the problem of saving her mill and the jobs of 5000 employees despite the opposition of her spoiled and luxury loving children who wish to close the mills rather than risk a possible loss of income. Tradition and the older generation triumph after mob violence has brought about the death of one young man, and love in the guise of the leader of mill workers has softened the heart of the heiress. In spite of the fact that it deals with a significant problem the picture misses significance because of hackneyed situations and a confused scenario. However, May Robson's unfailing artistry gives the production some claim to popularity.

ONE HOUR LATE

The subject of the film is a busy day in a big engineering firm, when romance and comedy are mingled with the blue prints. The production has not a great deal of depth but is nevertheless entertaining. Joe Morrison's singing is introduced successfully into the theme, and there is subtle humor in the situation in which the head of the firm, played admirably by Conrad Nagel, takes a friendly interest in a little stenographer who immediately magnifies it into a "grande passion." One scene is almost too tense; those who are squeamish about great heights above the ground will do well to close their eyes during the elevator sequence.

THE PAINTED VEIL

In this arrangement of Somerset Maugham's triangle novel a young woman capitulates to a handsome attaché of the embassy, but when her husband sternly gives her her choice between a life of hardship with him or marriage with her lover she follows her husband to the interior of China to fight against a deadly epidemic of cholera. In the end she recognizes her husband's nobility and finds the basis for a lasting love. Since the stage is well prepared for tragedy and none occurs, one is inclined to question whether the wages of sin are really according to Biblical precepts. It is, however, a very vital drama, full of human impulses and conflicts. Garbo loses her aloofness and is given full scope for her changing moods, and the background is the Orient with its squalor and its gorgeous pageantry.

POWER

"Power" in novel form has more of the qualities of greatness and universality than most of the other best sellers of our day, and the film version is worthy of the original. It is an ironic tragedy enacted in the early eighteenth century but equally pertinent to the present time. The story is of Suss the Jew who rose to unprecedented heights of influence in the small duchy of Württemberg, sacrificed every human tie to his insatiable craving for power and found in the end that his sacrifice was needless, his influence ephemeral, insecurely tottering upon the whims of a jealous king, and his hope of liberating his people an empty vision. Conrad Veidt is perfect in the role of Suss, the supporting cast is particularly fine and the photographic compositions are often comparable to the paintings of great masters. For this superb adaptation of Lion Feuchtwanger’s novel, British-Gaumont should be the envy of American producers.

STRANGE WIVES » »

Difficult to appreciate as a farce because some of the parts are played "straight" and impossible to accept as a comedy because it is constructed on exaggerated circumstances, this picture is a hodge-podge of dramatic elements, not confusing but not completely satisfying. A young husband deftly handles the problem of parasitical in-laws. His method is unique and might have created greater audience sympathy by bright, witty dialogue and by situations not quite so patently planned.

SWEET ADELINE » »

The combination of Kern-Hammerstein music, an excellent cast and skillful technical direction particularly in the dance ensembles, makes "Sweet Adeline" excellent entertainment. The picture is produced in the grand, though regulation, style with several very beautiful song numbers by Irene Dunne. The plot centers about Donald Woods, an aspiring playwright, his sweetheart, two backers of Woods’ operetta and the producer of the operetta. The introduction of the tandem bicycle, Edison’s first phonograph, the first automobile, and newspapers of Dewey’s victory at Manila provide an additional bit of historical interest. Along with its high grade of music, dancing and comedy, "Sweet Adeline" has the quality of charm which sets it above most other pictures of its type.

A western of much more interest than many. The story concerns a Southern Colonel who finds himself ruined after the Civil War. He starts West toward Texas with his attractive daughter and two darky retainers who provide much of the humor. The young Southern belle finds that roughing it in the costumes of the day is difficult so she disguises herself as a boy and the transformation is quite convincing. It is an entertaining picture in which the cattle rustling and frontier difficulties are well shown, and the love interest is pleasing.

Mady Christians, Jean Parker, Charles Bickford, Betty Furness. From the book by Ann Austin. Direction by Charles Brabin. M-G-M.

Mady Christians makes a vivid and outstanding figure of the poverty stricken, desperate mother whose determined struggle to make a better life for her children is eventually successful. The theme is powerfully motivated and mere incidents develop into scenes of high dramatic value without losing their force in a welter of sentiment. As a character study the picture undoubtedly achieves its aim but in doing so it rides rough shod over the emotions of the audience by presenting an opening scene that is shockingly sordid and a final scene that is offensive to our mores. Because it is too lacking in buoyancy, too consistently serious, it will have a limited appeal for adults.

DOUBLE BILLING: ARE YOU FOR OR AGAINST THE PRACTICE?

The Legion of Decency, aided by the force of public opinion expressed through the efforts of women's groups interested in better films movements, has apparently reached the industry and there is no doubt that we are getting a higher quality of films. In other words, there are more entertaining films—artistic, clean morally and intellectually satisfying. For a time the response through the box office gratified the producers but in California, at least, another condition is causing an irritation which sooner or later is bound to react as a boomerang which may not be understood by these same producing companies. I am speaking of the abominable custom of double-billing which makes it impossible to enjoy single features without a plethora of other material which destroys all enjoyment of the programs.

How many people really want to see two feature pictures on a single program at a theatre? If we could only know, if the exhibitors could know, would this trade practice continue? Who is responsible for its continuance? The chain theatre managers snarl at the independent exhibitors; the independent exhibitors throw the blame upon the public which is out for bargains. Neither one will give single billing a chance to prove its popularity and the hint comes to us that the independent producers are the instigators. How can we tell? Some time ago the Los Angeles Times printed a column written by its dramatic critic, Edwin Schallert, in which he quoted a number of prominent producers who seemed united in opposing the practice. Samuel Goldwyn is quoted as saying, "Block-booking is one of the causes of double-billing because it forces many exhibitors to take more picture than they want. Too many pictures are produced, and the industry should be forced to make fewer." Irving Thalberg says: "I have never been convinced that the public really desired to sit through an hour and a half of mediocre entertainment, in order to enjoy the picture they came to see." Jack Warner is quoted as follows: "Eventually in self-protection the producers may have to take an united stand against the double-bill if the exhibitors don't get together. Exibitors in their frantic scramble for pictures for these programs are buying films hurriedly produced by movie makers whose sole idea in making these pictures is to get them on a double bill." Jessie Lasky says, "The public would prefer a single good feature, plus two or three quality short subjects, but no amount of artificial regulation can curb the practice. Give an exhibitor outstanding pictures and he will automatically abandon the practice." In reply to Mr. Lasky's statement, the films are better, but the practice continues. They are even talking of double-billing "David Copperfield," a two-hour feature, which certainly merits the judgment "outstanding" if any feature does. If this is double-billed—what then?

Sometimes the interpretation of the law can bring about conditions which can scarcely be considered of social value. For example in Philadelphia on January 31, Judge George A.
Welsh in the Federal District Court, issued an injunction against nine of the large motion picture concerns, restraining them from enforcing a clause in contracts prohibiting exhibitors from showing double features. He said that the clause was in “restraint of trade.” From a legal viewpoint perhaps the major producing companies are unfairly trying to dictate the conditions upon which their pictures are to be shown; are possibly trying to eliminate the showing of independent films. But on the other hand why should a producer be forced to have his film ruined by having it shown on a bill with an inferior product? It is a quaint custom which prevents the maker of an artistic product from displaying it in surroundings which show it to best advantage.

When Mr. Roosevelt was organizing the country for “recovery” and codes for the different industries were under advisement, practically every educational and social group in the country—realizing the undermining social influence of the double-bill in motion picture exhibition—wired either to him or to Mr. Sol Rosenblatt to introduce a clause in the code prohibiting the practice. Mr. Roosevelt, seeing only more work for more people, vetoed the suggestion. And yet these “quickies” use a degrading influence today, and the double-bill is making it impossible for families to enjoy evenings at the movies, or children to have any suitable programs for their special enjoyment.

There is a good deal of feeling growing up against the practice of block-booking and blind-selling. Legislation against it is one of the present objectives of the Motion Picture Research Council. An article in the New York Tribune by Walter Lippman, “The Morals of the Movies,” syndicated all over the country, expressed his opinion that this method of selling and distributing films must be stopped in order to open the door to competition by independent and experimenting producers. He believes that when pictures are produced under the same system which books, theatres, magazines, etc., operate and have to stand the test of circulation, then audiences can have a freedom of choice and communities can be able to enforce the moral standards for which they stand. All pictures will then not be forced upon all mentalities and all ages, “puritans and libertines” alike.

The women’s groups for the most part have never gone out for legislation. I do not think it is because, as our critics would believe, we are influenced by the industry, but perhaps we have realized that censorship as legally exercised does not clean up a movie. The ideas, the suggestions portrayed on the screen, are too illusive for the censor’s shears and moral standards and spiritual values cannot be protected in this way. Also we are so close to the exhibitors in our contacts that we believe that they can adjust their programs to community needs if they will. The situation in Southern California is worse than it has ever been in the ten years of our efforts. The Parent-Teacher Association in a recent informal survey contacting some two thousand local families, found that children themselves admitted fatigue from the long hours of a double feature showing; that over 35% of the families were not attending theatres; that 25% were attending infrequently because of the long programs and the ill assorted material shown. Theatres are undoubtedly losing a large potential audience by the policy, and the box office will react eventually upon the producers who control a majority of the theatres.

Are you for or against double-billing? If, as we suspect you, too, are against it, will you voice an articulate protest? What can be done? At the present time we can at least register our protest—we can go to the theatre at the hour the feature is shown which we want to see, and walk out when it is finished! We can protest vocally and in writing to the theatre managers, and in writing to the Department of Public Relations, Association of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, either in New York or in Hollywood. If sufficient objections are registered, if the box office receipts in addition tell a story of lack of interest in double bills, we may be able to impress the industry as a whole, that in addition to clean movies, the public also wishes the courtesy of freedom of choice.

BABOONA

Martin Johnson. Fox.

The Martin Johnsons would give us to believe that a vacation trip by airplane over Africa is like any picnic jaunt. No hint is given of the careful preparation necessary to carry such an expedition to success. We might believe that one can refuel at any water hole. But overlooking this lack of realism, we are given a very pleasing impression of the continent, with beautiful shots of mountains, valleys, jungles and wild creatures from an angle impossible otherwise. It is quite fascinating and would make an exceedingly en-taining film were it shortened by judicious cutting.

THE BEST MAN WINS » »

This story concerns the friendship of two divers, one of whom rescues the other from death. The rescued man subsequently becomes a harbor policeman and the rescuer a gambler who sells his services to an illicit diving gang. Then ensues a series of exciting incidents in which the officer of the law is torn between his duty to his job and memory of his obligation. It is interesting for its diving scenes. As a picture it is not very good and not very bad and if we were allotting stars to films it would hardly rate one of any color.

BABBITT » »
Guy Kibbe, Aline MacMahon. From the novel by Sinclair Lewis. Screen play by Mary McCall; adapted by Tom Reed and Niven Busch. Direction by William Keighley. First National-Warner Bros.

Audiences will react to this film as many readers did to the book, for there were people who disliked Babbitt because he was so obvious an example of an average small town bore. Yet he was important to his family and possibly to his community: a real estate dealer, a member of the lodge, of the church, the golf club and the local "Booster's" club, etc. He was dull socially and not astute enough in business to avoid becoming innocently involved in a crooked deal. The picture is an adequate adaptation of the novel and Guy Kibbe is an adequate Babbitt, with whom and at whom we may laugh complacently. His wife is an understanding woman who always believes in him; his children represent the coming generation of the 1920 period, and they make up a typical "Main Street" family whose few self-sufficient interests entertain in a quiet homey way.

CRIME WITHOUT PASSION » »
Claude Rains, Margo, Whitney Bourne, Stanley Ridges. Written, produced and directed by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, Paramount.

One seldom sees a more bitterly ironical picture than this, or a more brilliant actor than Claude Rains in the part of Lee Gentry. In the beginning of the story he is a shrewd, successful criminal lawyer. Unscrupulous and wily in manufacturing evidence to exonerate his guilty clients he has never lost a case. His passion for outwitting justice and his necessity for successive violent love affairs make up his life. In the end, caught in a net of circumstantial evidence and believing himself in danger of conviction for a crime he has unintentionally committed, he loses his nerve at a critical moment and makes an irrevocable blunder. Margo, the Mexican dancer, is magnificent in the role of his cast off paramour, tortured almost to insanity by Ramirez, played by Paul Muni, spends most of his adult life, but the title fails to suggest the meaning of the story portrayed. It is the soul struggle of a Mexican half-caste who as an idealist has sacrificed and struggled to become a lawyer only to find that he is inadequately trained to combat the power which money and influence seem to have in a court of justice. In his bitterness he goes back to his vulgar environment to get, in any way, what he now believes is the most important thing in life. The story is strong and forceful and it is magnificently acted and well directed. Without reflecting on the law it shows the injustice of its execution, and to an adult the character development is logical and dramatic and the dénouement interesting although somewhat weak by comparison with the rest of the film.

Although "Carnival" is handicapped by a plot which lacks spontaneity and by second-rate ethics it is not devoid of entertainment value. It revolves about an irresistible baby who, to the indignation of social service workers, is reared by his father, the proprietor of a puppet show, and his two assistants in the gay environment of a street carnival. The film maintains a human interest quality and has some amusing lines and situations.

EVERGREEN
Jessie Mathews, Sonnie Hale, Betty Balfour, Barney Mackay. Taken from the stage play by the same name by Charles B. Cochran. Lyrics and music by Richard Rogers and Henry Woods. Direction by Victor Savilo. British-Gaumont.

In this musical picture, beautifully costumed and set, the lyrical qualities of a Victor Herbert operetta are combined with the more modern conception of a dance extravaganza. Jessie Mathews, the leading lady, has a lovely voice as well as a magnetic personality and fits delightfully into her role of dancer and singer. A pleasantly romantic plot holds the various sequences together and makes the picture very appealing family entertainment.

ENCHANTED APRIL
Ann Harding, Frank Morgan. From the novel by "Elizabeth" and the dramatization by Kane Campbell. Screen play by Hoffenstein and Harris. Direction by Harry Beaumont. R-K-O.

To subject to austere literary criticism this, the lightest of all of "Elizabeth's" novels, would be like trying to trap and analyze a sunbeam. It is a brave venture on the part of the studios to attempt to catch with a camera the elfin charm and whimsy of such a story. Yet, in this instance the actors have caught and the camera has recorded something of these qualities. The four English ladies who go off to a villa in Italy for a month in order to escape their stodgy husbands or other problems take the audience with them, and in the amusing frictions which follow one laughs with and at them. There is here only a faint flavor of that bitter irony which characterized this brilliant author's style, and much of the witty dialogue which sparkles upon her pages has been retained.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS
Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth, Billie Burke. From the play by Frank M. Cavett and Edward B. Roberts. Screen play by Joseph L. Mankiewicz. Direction by W. S. Van Dyke. M-G-M.

This picture was made for the sole purpose of being amusing. The director and a notable cast seem to have worked harmoniously and successfully toward this end. If, therefore, the vagaries of the trite and shallow plot leave one a little bewildered, sparkling dialogue and humorous incidents included for their own sake are adequate compensation for many in the audience. As to the theme, the story concerns the blind love of a girl for a man who has left her waiting at the church and the deeper love of another man for her. Often this type of light sophisticated comedy seems forced but this picture maintains an even tempo of humor and gayety balanced by pathos and courage in which the characters maintain a whimsical, debonair attitude in the face of the grave difficulties they encounter. Hollywood probably mirrors its own reputed attitude toward love and marriage and easy divorce in the extreme situations which are created and as a comedy of manners American adult discount is required for its acceptance.

THE GILDED LILY
Claudette Colbert, Fred McMurray. Direction by Wesley Ruggles. Paramount.

Seated on a bench in the park, a newspaper reporter and a stenographer compare their dreams for the future. We progress with them through the entertaining comedy that follows and at the end we find that their dreams were within their grasp all the while but they didn't know it. The theme incorporates clever dialogue, witty repartee and amusing situations which, though utterly impossible, seem plausible enough. With her vivacity and skilled acting, Miss Colbert brings charm to her role of modern Cinderella.

HAPPINESS AHEAD  »  »

Bored with society and revolting against the marriage plans of a designing mother, but backed by the moral support of a trusting father, a daughter poses as a poor girl. Sincere in her purpose, she falls in love with a young man and her father helps her when explanations become necessary. Miss Hutchinson, as the daughter, brings an interesting new face to the screen. HOME ON THE RANGE  »  »

With more intelligent direction and more plausible dialogue than is customary in Westerns, the story treats of three crooks who meet with success until they attempt to ruin two brothers who own a cattle ranch in the Southwest. Jackie Coogan performs as a jockey in the exciting race when finally recoups the family fortune, and the inn scene is embellished by a theme song rendered by Joe Morrison. The vision of youth might be slightly confused by the fact that what is bad in a man, hard-boiled sophistication with card-sharpening and swindling in all its branches, merely leads the feminine member of the group to the arms of a handsome rancher.

The beautiful, rugged highlands of Wyoming harbor the last range of wild animals in the United States. It is a privilege not to be forgotten to be given a glimpse of these creatures in their native habitat where they live and die unheeded by humans. The expedition which the public is permitted to follow in this film has for its purpose the capture of some species for museum pieces and the whole picture is novel and stimulating. It has great educational value and is delightful entertainment as well.

LIFE RETURNS  »  »

In capitalizing upon the publicity given a recent scientific experiment, this picture may have interest for a portion of the public, but fiction and science rarely combine successfully and this attempt is no exception. It could have had a deeper significance than pure amusement. The doctor with his scientific research could have been the moving force fighting for the cause to which he dedicated his life. Instead, the interest shifts, and through a bog of sentimentality the focus centers on the boy, his future and his dog's life. Dr. Cornish's experiment at Berkeley aroused general interest, but this picture will do little to increase sympathy for such research, and medical men may be justly affronted by a characterization which seems to imply that a brilliant experimenter, handicapped by family responsibility, excusably becomes a second rate man, a third rate father and a poor sport. The scene in the laboratory during the experiment is interesting and (to the layman at least) realistic. But the dignity of this scene is obliterated by subsequent shots of the boy's gang and an incredible finale which suggests a martyr about to ascend the guillotine.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER  »  »

Almost every ingredient of a stirring romantic adventure tale is to be found in this exhilarating film. Esprit de corps is its governing theme: the devotion of the Bengal Lancers to their regiment. On the frontier of India by the Kyber Pass are stationed these British soldiers whose task is to subdue the hostile tribes and keep the pass open. Their Colonel, stern, emotionally inarticulate, and fervent in his devotion to duty; the Colonel’s son, just out of Sandhurst and insufficiently seasoned for the hardships of Indian service; a hard shelled Scotchman and a suave Englishman are the central figures in the story. Gorgeous photography, magnificent riding, ferocious battle scenes, humor, intrigue and sentiment are skillfully blended in a picture that will make the name of Bengal Lancer the embodiment of valuable achievement and the criterion of heroic conduct. It is a stunning spectacle and thrilling entertainment.

MYSTERY WOMAN

In order to recover a paper necessary to prove the innocence of her husband who has been wrongly convicted of treachery, an adoring wife becomes a suave espionage agent and trails several men from France to America. Love, violence, intrigue, secret codes, add their quota to the story which moves swiftly but reaches no dramatic peaks. Modishly dressed characters, artistic interiors and polite repartee give it an air of sophistication. It is fairly entertaining, easily forgotten.

MAN OF ARAN

A distinguished example of pure cinema which gives us the record—the saga—of man’s existence on the Isles of Aran where existence is a continual struggle against the elements. There is no story, and it gives us no homely details of community life, of social contacts, of schools, or day by day family routine. But it shows the magnificent physical beauty of the rocky islands, bare of trees or even shrubs, the treacherous beauty of the ponding seas, and the tremendous effort needed to wrest food from the water and from the meager soil dug from crevices, enriched by sea weed and laid on the barren rocks for farm land.

It pictures the man on a grilling two days fight with a shark; the woman working endlessly at primitive tasks and always watching because of the hazards of her man’s life; the boy learning to do his share of the constant work necessary to keep them provisioned. The sound of the pounding sea is impressive and the musical accompaniment, based on Irish folk songs, adds greatly to the atmosphere. There is possibly too much repetition but the very monotony gives one the “feel” of life on Aran. Magnificent photography and an unusual appreciation of life in primitive form make the film well worth seeing.

THE MIGHTY BARNUM

According to “Time” December 31, 1934, Gene Fowler, author of the book from which this picture was made, when asked if he had tried to follow history, replied, “We tried to throw it out of the window.” The picture itself is prefaced by a note disclaiming all pretense to verity, but it might have been more interesting had it been an authentic biography. As it is, it seems to lack continuity and conviction and is merely a haphazard collection of incidents, often in very poor taste, in which the central figure is a grotesque preposterous Barnum so infantile in his behavior that one cannot imagine his becoming the most successful showman in America even with the brains of Bailey to help him. The film is entertaining not because of any light it sheds on the career of a picturesque character, but because Wallace Beery and Adolph Menjou, surrounded by side show “freaks,” seem to be having such a good time masquerading as Barnum and
The Night is Young
Ramon Navarro, Evelyn Laye, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Edward Everett Horton, Donald Cook, Henry Stephenson, Rosalind Russell. From the story by Vicki Baum. Direction by Dudley Murphy. M-G-M.

Beginning with the light arabesques of a ballet in rehearsal, the film maintains a delicate balance between gaiety and sentiment to the melodious accompaniment of Viennese waltzes. The story is old but perenially romantic: a young archduke, promised to a maid of high station whose chief virtue lies in a zeal for knitting, is permitted six months postponement for a love affair through the kindness of the old Emperor, who at the end recalls him to duty to his people and his dynasty. The settings are charming for the idyllic love of Paul Gustave and little Lisli, which is never permitted to cloy because of the lively comedy of Horton, Butterworth and Una Merkel.

In this picture a criminal lawyer carries out a cold blooded premeditated plan to commit a "perfect" crime by planting evidence that will confuse the jury and cause a disagreement as to the identity of the murderer. Our Daily Bread

King Vidor evidently wished to treat an economic problem seriously and without bias and the underlying theme of labor for consumption, is conspicuously the core of this story. But there is also the old drama of man's struggle with nature in the business of making a living, and this, together with some good characterization, saves the picture from being merely "platform" narrative. It concerns the adventures of a group of unemployed who pitch camp upon an abandoned farm and make an experiment in socialistic living. They encounter difficulties with the mortgage, with the elements and with each other, but emerge victorious in a dramatic climax when by their own labor they bring water to the parched corn fields, and save the crop and their own ideals. The story is somewhat thin in its structure, but will be appealing to those who believe that land and labor can solve the problems of the present economic stress. There is little art and less excitement in the picture, but it is redeemed from boredom by its human interest and the evident sincerity of its conception.

Petersburg Nights

A young musical genius tries to make his way to fame in the Russia of the old regime. His music is forceful but disturbing and another, a mediocre fellow, wins the laurels he has created. But the people who have heard his composition and grasped its significance, adopt it as their own and it becomes the theme song of the revolution. The picture seems slow to American audiences but it will appeal to those interested in Soviet art. The technique of photography is, with one exception, extremely modern, while the acting is reminiscent of early silent films. But there is tremendous power evident in spite of the exaggerated over-emphasis and artificiality particularly evident in the treatment of relations between individuals and the reactions of individuals. The Russian people are the chief protagonists, a restless, surging, inarticulate mass looking for a means of expression. It comes at last in the medium of the music which has no significance until it becomes the instrument of the people and an expression of mass emotion. It is propaganda, of course, but effective.

The Port of Lost Dreams
Bill Boyd, Lola Lane, George Marion. Direction by Frank Strayer. Invincible Picture Corp.

A young fishing boat skipper gives refuge to a girl stowaway whom he afterwards marries. The course of true love is interrupted by the girl's past, the police, and also... by the husband's lack of faith. To compensate for this, he commits a crime in order to follow his young wife to prison where he finds forgiveness. The picture is slightly reminiscent of "Anna Christie" in setting and theme and because George Marion again plays the role of an old sea captain whose faith and sympathy help to bring reformation to the girl. But there the similarity ends, for instead of holding interest through superb character building this film tells a feeble and unconvincing story which only adequate acting and realistic settings save from complete mediocrity.

\[\text{THE PRESIDENT VANISHES} \]

Perhaps producer Walter Wanger had some theories he wanted to release in this picture but "The President Vanishes" leads one to believe that he was more concerned with making a stirring melodrama than with inveighing against capitalist-made wars. Some footage is given to peace propaganda but the arguments are not carried to any real conclusion. The plot is concerned with a national crisis arising from a difference of opinion between the President and Congress about the United States' entrance into a foreign war. The mysterious army of "Grey Shirts" led by a madman and financed by an unscrupulous, industrial magnate, is the force fomenting war, and the President is the obstacle in its path. When he disappears suspicion points in its direction. The picture is neither more nor less significant than other mystery melodramas but more daring in that it chooses to use an imaginary President of the United States as its leading character.

Not recommended; possibly misleading

Further analysis of "The President Vanishes" leads us to believe that possibly the above review (first published in the mid-month Advance Supplement) overlooked a significant suggestion in the film, i.e. that munition makers, lobbyists, bankers and newspaper interests may be the cooperating and underlying forces carrying countries toward war. This fact has been brought out in such recent books as "Merchants of Death," "Iron, Blood and Steel" and "Secret International" and it is interesting and important that films are becoming conscious of a situation arousing public attention today. This is a moderately entertaining program picture. Three women become involved in the murder of an ex-policeman through the perfidy of a modiste who has sold the same "exclusive" model to each. The story never reaches a high pitch of excitement, since there are numerous loopholes provided for the safety of the main characters, notably the heroine, and the insincerity displayed by them makes their welfare of no great consequence to the audience.

\[\text{STRANGE WIVES} \]

Difficult to appreciate as a farce because some of the parts are played "straight," and impossible to accept as a comedy because it is constructed on exaggerated circumstances, this picture is a hodge-podge of dramatic elements, not confusing but not completely satisfying. A young husband deftly handles the problem of parasitical in-laws. His method is unique and might have created audience sympathy by bright, witty dialogue and by situations not so patently planned.

\[\text{SNAKE FROM THE HEART} \]

This is a long and involved picture depicting the efforts of dishonest politicians to discredit an honest mayor in order to obtain control of a fund for unemployment relief. A love story develops with a girl from the bread line and one of the crooked politicians as the leading figures, and the man is thereby reformed, but not until there has been some very unethical behavior on the part of both. Baby Jane appears as one of the children in a day nursery and exerts enough charm to make the picture seem better than it is. She is a ray of sunshine.

SOCIETY DOCTOR  »  »
Chester Morris, Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce, Billie Burke. Based upon the play, "The Harbor," by Theodore Reeves. Direction by George B. Seitz. M-G-M.

In depicting the difficulties of an ethical young doctor trying to adhere to his principles in a fashionable hospital which is run by political influence with a corrupt head doctor, this picture tells an interesting and dramatic story. However, although the emphasis laid upon the unethical behavior of many of the staff serves to heighten the effect of the hero's moral courage, an unfortunate and exaggerated impression is given of the conditions exist in hospitals. The dramatic climax, a delicate operation directed by the patient with the aid of mirrors, is not for squeamish audiences.

UNDER PRESSURE  »  »

Lowe and McLaglen, apostles of brawn and red corpuscles, battle in a new medium, compressed air. As leaders of a gang of "sandhogs" tunneling under East River, it is their primary urge to win the race against the bruisers from the New York side, regardless of life or limb. Danger and violence are paramount, and one climax follows another. The insidious "bends" and paralysis attack them, as well as fire sweeping through the tunnel and the mighty force of an explosion. There are in fact too many climaxes for good drama or a weak heart. The picture's chief value lies in the mechanical facts it presents rather than for its fictional qualities; and its appeal is limited for this reason.

Adolescents, 12 to 16  Children, 8 to 12
Of interest to older boys  Too harrowing

WINGS IN THE DARK  »  »

The romance between a girl pilot and a blinded aviator encourages the man to perfect an aeronautical device that would make it possible for even a blind man to fly. Although apparently fantastic in conception it is possible to imagine that the idea may not be an improbable development of the future and it is logically developed in the story, making for dramatic thrills. It is an entertaining picture, well cast and directed, with definite appeal for family audiences.

THE WINNING TICKET  »  »
Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy, Irene Hervey. From an original story by Robert Pirosh and George Seaton. Direction by Charles F. Riesner. M-G-M.

A light slapstick comedy concerning an artless, good natured Italian barber, married to a rollicking Irish woman. He surreptitiously buys a ticket on the Irish sweepstakes and luck favors him only to find the ticket misplaced. The noisy, argumentative family life becomes tiresome but on the whole it is a naive comedy, chief criticism of which is its length.

The Women's University Club is not previewing serials for the following reasons: This type of chapter film is shown principally at children's matinees where audience age ranges between the ages of two and ten years as a rule. The films have little appeal for more sophisticated groups. The Women's University Club does not believe that weekly junior matinee programs are possible at the present time because of the lack of suitable available material. It also believes that a regular movie habit is unwise to encourage in children under twelve. Because serials undoubtedly are a lure stimulating weekly attendance, we therefore hesitate to report on them, believing that approval of any would seem to violate our policy.

EVALUATING PICTURES FOR CHILDREN

"Do you choose pictures for children on the basis of what they really enjoy or on the basis of what you consider is good for them?" "Are not present day children more advanced and therefore able to enjoy and appreciate more grown up films than you would have enjoyed at their age?" At almost every meeting where there is discussion concerning the "previewing" of pictures for children, someone asks us to answer one or both of these questions.

In answering the first question we must immediately dispose of the fallacy that a child cannot enjoy what is good for him. The fact, born out by the experience of groups studying the subject of motion picture entertainment for children, is that normal children are usually most enthusiastic about the movies that have been recommended by the majority of previewing groups as being not only suitable but of a high degree of artistic and technical excellence. Children are naturally critical, though not analytical, and they like good pictures better than poor ones. They also prefer books and movies that deal with emotions and situations touching upon their own experiences or falling within the realm of their comprehension. The ideal picture for a child is not a "harmless" movie but one which will gratify his natural yearning for beauty and satisfy his normal desire to identify himself with actors whose behavior and psychology he can understand. If a picture fails in these respects it is likely to bore him, and if it portrays false standards it will definitely injure him. In either case is not "good" for him.

In almost any picture there are elements that a child will enjoy; thrills, laughter, beauty, action, all of which give temporary pleasure. A theatre manager listening to the response of a child audience may genuinely believe that he has provided a good program, but if he cares to inquire why the children jump about in their seats, make noisy comments and scamper up and down the aisles, anyone familiar with child psychology will tell him it is because they are bored or overtired. They may not understand the picture, it may not be good enough to hold their continued interest or it may be too stimulating, and their nervous systems rebel at the tension.

As for the question of what is or is not beyond the comprehension of our modern children, we can only answer that, although these children on the whole may be more familiar with the existence of crime, broken homes, drunkenness and other sad facts of life than we were, their emotional responses and their nervous systems are no more ready to receive the stimulus of adult problems than ours were at their age.

A child may accept mentally and seemingly digest a problem far too complicated for his unstable emotions to cope with. For example, a man who had taken his eight-year-old daughter to "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" was pleased that the child had reacted violently to the way the soldiers were treated, and he proudly recounted her aversion to the whole idea of war, saying that the picture had therefore had a good effect upon her. He might justly be gratified that his child had the superior intelligence to think things out for herself and to see deeper into the picture than its story of adventure. However, what he may not have realized was that the picture had started a whole train of unhappy thoughts in the mind of his little girl. He had been a soldier in the British army during the war, and his daughter thought of the fictitious character in terms of her own father and no doubt suffered on his account to see the unhappiness of the young subaltern in the picture.

If parents explain and talk over such problems with their children they mitigate the danger of emotional disturbances, but clinics are crowded with children who are there for no other reason than that they have been exposed to too young to the devastating influence of unhappy experiences that in one way or another have destroyed their sense of security.

We believe it is essential that a child should see only those movies that are suited to his emotional as well as to his mental age. Movies for children should be artistically and technically good, free from sentimentality, from warped psychology, from characters who may be glamorous but who are ethically undesirable, and from situations the true significance of which a child has not the experience to evaluate.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

With the permission of Mrs. Leo B. Hedges, California State Chairman of Motion Pictures, P.-T. A., we are permitted to quote from a survey made with the cooperation of the teachers of the John C. Fremont High School and the Association of Parents and Teachers. We regret very much that lack of space makes it impossible to print the entire report. It is, in our opinion, interesting and illuminating. The foreword, quoted from Carl Millikan, Secretary of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, gives it added significance. He says: "For every man and woman who reads a good book a week, a hundred go to the motion picture theatre. For every one who goes to a concert or to an opera, 10,000 go to the movies. For every one who has access to good paintings and good sculpture, probably 100,000 go to the movies."

FEATURE FILMS

AFTER OFFICE HOURS
Constance Bennett, Clark Gable, Stuart Erwin, Billie Burke. From a story by Lawrence Stallings and Dale Van Every. Direction by Robert L. Leonard. M-G-M.

A bright city editor solves a sordid murder, but not until the audience delves into a welter of intrigue, scandle and rotten politics with the usual accompaniment of heavy drinking. Clark Gable as the City Editor and Constance Bennett as the society girl in search of a thrill, give rather uninspired and stereotyped performances. Yet their presence in the picture and the sophisticated brittle atmosphere of “High Society” make for a certain type of fast moving entertainment.

ALL THE KING’S HORSES
Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis, Eugene Pallette, Edward Everett Horton. Direction by Frank Tuttle. Paramount.

Here is a charmingly diverting musical comedy with melodious songs, bewitching dancing and a sparkle and dash to the whole which give it unusual attractiveness. The plot is not new: a mythical kingdom and a Queen who feels that her serious minded husband neglects her for too many Affairs of State. There is the gay, lighthearted subject so like the King in appearance that complications follow and, all is done in excellent taste with much humor and gayety. Carl Brisson has a delightful personality and Mary Ellis is very attractive too, while Eugene Pallette furnishes outstanding comedy in his inimitable manner.

BEHIND THE EVIDENCE

A melodrama concerning the usual alert and ambitious young newspaperman who stumbles upon a gang of hold-up men with whom his girl is innocently involved. His amateur and clumsy detections bring about the gang's capture after an hour fraught with suspense, shootings and fistfights. The plot is silly and improbable; the actors are awkward and conscious with the possible exception of Donald Cook as the suave villain.

THE BLUE LIGHT
Leni Riefenstahl, Bela Balcz, and the native villagers of Santa Maria at the base of Mt. Cristallo in the Italian Dolomites. Cooperatively produced and directed by Leni Riefenstahl, Bela Balcz and John Schneeberger. Gli Boag.

In this pictorial gem a simple folk legend of the people of the tiny mountain village of Santa Maria is superimposed upon a background of such overpowering beauty that it will leave a lasting impression on the minds of all who see it. The legend centers about the hypnotic influence of a blue light seen at each full moon on the top of a mountain in the Italian Dolomites. Young men of the village are lured to their death, and the natives attribute the tragedies to the influence of a mountain girl whom they call a witch. The weird and sinister mood of the whole picture is enhanced by amazing types of villagers whose lives are controlled by superstition. It is probably too long and too heavy to draw the general public.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE

For fifteen years Abbie refuses to marry Captain Zenas because of his vile temper, but when he retires from the sea, she takes her persistent suitor and his two tramp-like cronies under her wing. The virtues of the pictures are negative; it is harmless but tiresome. Neither the characters nor Cape Cod settings ring true to life.

DOG OF FLANDERS

This famous child classic has been altered to soften its tragedy and only the faint pattern of the original remains. Those who loved the book will be disappointed, but it is a happier plot on the whole. It tells the story of a young Flemish boy living alone with his old grandfather and their devoted dog. Nello's consuming ambition is to become a painter, and he enters a drawing in a scholarship contest. After disappointments and disillusionment he wins, and faces a future of fulfillment. As a picture it is slow and a little tedious. Frankie Thomas is not natural or spontaneous, and the plot, with its suggestion of social bitterness and frustration, is a little old fashioned even in its new dress. It is a family picture but not outstanding in entertainment value.

THE GOOD FAIRY

If we miss the cynical sophistication of the play in this film version, it is without regret, for “The Good Fairy” has emerged as a deliciously frothy comedy which keeps the audience alert and convulsed throughout its length. Luisa Ginglebusher is as fantastic as her name. She is an orphan, released from a Budapest asylum to work as an usherette in a motion picture theatre. Her ambition to do a good deed every day leads her into a most astonishing sequence of events and into dangers which her wholesome naiveté does not recognize, though it protects her like armor. It is hilariously funny; the lines are brilliant, the acting inspired and the direction swift and tasteful. It is one comedy not to be missed by those seeking the unusual in story and talent.

THE GREAT HOTEL MURDER

Apparently we like our screen murders with a laugh. At any rate the current model of movie-detective must be dashing, quick-witted and well-supplied with snappy remarks. Edmund Lowe fills this role while McLaglen plays his foil as the stupid hotel detective. With almost everyone in sight suspected of the murder, the author of the play still manages to keep the dénouement a satisfactory surprise. Those who enjoy mystery dramas will find this fair entertainment.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRL

This story of a high school girl who is seduced by a fellow schoolmate cannot be classed among the successful propaganda pictures. The characters are hackneyed types, mere personifications of certain virtues and vices without the individuality or human qualities which can win from an audience the sympathy which should be the keynote of such a production. It lacks imagination or skill in writing, and is crudely acted and directed.
Its moral is so obvious that one derives from it only the uncomfortable boredom which results from a trite idea unskillfully portrayed.

THE IRON DUKE

George Arliss has so large a following on stage and screen that we hesitate to pronounce his latest British release dull, but at best it is disappointing. Mr. Arliss is Mr. Arliss again in a handsomely mounted story of that period in English history depicting the escape of Napoleon from Elba and the consequent breaking up of the congress at Vienna. It carries us through the battle of Waterloo, the congress at Paris and the restoration of the Bourbons to the French throne, the shooting of Marshal Ney and Wellington’s appearance before the House of Lords to defend his good name. But at no time does Mr. Arliss become the romantic Duke of Wellington, and it is difficult for us to imagine him in an episode which needs explanation to a country at large. It is serious and heavy and will prove interesting if not particularly entertaining as a new vehicle for Mr. Arliss’ histrionic ability.

LET’S LIVE TONIGHT

A cloyingly saccharine tale of brotherly chivalry, etc., etc. The two are in love with the same girl. The elder, dissipated sophisticate, has all the charm while the younger idealistic, hardworking soul gets only the knocks in life. It is, of course, very light, but it is so transparent and sentimental that it lacks real interest in spite of pleasant music.

LIVING ON VELVET

Thinner and more trivial than its poorest predecessor is this new vehicle for Kay Francis. Like a bolt of lightning, love strikes our hero and heroine when their eyes meet for the first time. He is a gentle though untraceable lunatic whose manias are reckless flying, being quaintly rude to everyone he meets and spending more money than he has. She is a romantic soul who yearns to help her beloved face the world “as it is.” After their marriage they wrangle in a well bred manner but the cause seems lost until Mr. Brent bumps his head in an automobile accident. The picture fades on a note of whimsy as the lovers talk meaningful nothings on a park bench.

LOVE IN BLOOM

“My Heart Is an Open Book” is the theme song for this very poor musical romance. Inane dialogue between Burns and Allen is interpolated at intervals to relieve what otherwise could have become a tragic story. A naive boy composer, stranded while making an assault upon New York publishers, joins forces with a girl, also stranded, who has left a carnival to find a job as a chorus girl. The standards of conduct portrayed are somewhat tarnished, the story is cheaply sentimental and the dialogue is often vulgar. Burns and Allen as carnival attaches may furnish entertainment for their followers.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40

In this picture Will Rogers plays the part of a small town newspaper owner whose homely and honest philosophy endears him to the townspeople and enables him to bring happiness and vindication to a young man who has been falsely imprisoned. THE LITTLE COLONEL

If you are an adult it depends a good deal upon your own remembrance of the “Little Colonel” stories whether you will appreciate their interpretation on the screen. And if you are a “young modern” you will probably judge it more as a vehicle for charming little Shirley Temple whom we are sure you enjoy. We believe that you will not object to the plot’s being a little sentimental and melodramatic because it gives Shirley a role suited to her. It is a story of the antagonism between the North and South still existing after the Civil war. Shirley is the little girl whose mother married a northern soldier and caused family discord. The child brings harmony again because of her sweet and lovable self. The settings and scenery are beautiful. Bill Robinson and the cunning little colored children are lots of fun, and the color sequence at the end is like a lovely page from a story book.

THE MYSTERIOUS MR. WONG

Upon the adventures of Mr. Wong, who believes the legend that great power will come to the person who possesses all twelve of the gold coins bestowed upon friends by the dying Confucius, this picture is based. It begins as a thriller, with an excellent mixture of mystery and humor. The suspense is well sustained during the first half, then the action becomes so melodramatic with murder and miraculous escapes that credibility is stretched past the point of interest. While not intended for an audience with discriminating taste, the picture may prove entertaining for those who like sinister settings in a mysterious Chinatown atmosphere.

THE MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD

Ever since Charles Dickens died, writers have been trying to achieve a fitting solution for his unfinished mystery of Edwin Drood and the goal is not in sight. The film dénouement is obvious and devices are used which would scarcely have been chosen by the novelist. Nevertheless in other fields the picture is very good Dickens. The characters are sharply drawn, almost to the point of caricature; there is a strong flavor of nineteenth century England; the very weather is important in influencing the moods and decisions of the people. In addition the cast has been remarkably well chosen, from Heather Angel, Douglass Montgomery and Claude Rains, (who gives us a fascinating, half-crazed Jasper), through all the lesser personages to the little boy who stones the sexton. While it is not a big picture in comparison with David Copperfield, it deserves a good nook in the film library of Dickens.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS

A piece of extravagant, brightly imaginative nonsense, the film relates the adventures of a scientist who invents a magic ray to transform marble into human flesh and thereupon goes on a tour with the gardener’s daughter and all the gods of Olympus. The conception is undoubtedly original and has the promise of hilarious satire which is sometimes justified by clever dialogue and stagecraft. However, it soon descends to slapstick and vulgarity and ends with the stale explanation that all the mad escapades are merely figments of a dream.

ONE MORE SPRING

It is frequently true that a finely conceived literary gem is not successful as a picture. In fact it is more difficult to translate such a book into cinematic form. “One More Spring” by Robert Nathan is an example. Hardly a novel—rather an essay, in fictional form, a witty, biting, satire of the depression as it affected different types of individuals, its essence has not been caught in the motion picture. The preposterous irony of the book was impossible to translate to the screen and the adaptation tells a slow moving tale of three men and a girl who find shelter and a precarious existence throughout a long winter until spring brings promise of happier days. It may appeal to those unfamiliar with the book as a pleasant, amusing comedy.

This musical comedy starring the dance team of Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire, while not so good as "Gay Divorcee," is gay, glamorous and tuneful. ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY

A mysterious black rider attempts to gain possession of a radium mine by murdering all the heirs of the owner in a revolting fashion. "Chic" Sale impersonates the pottering old sheriff who can not cope with the situation until an energetic and heroic young engineer arrives on the scene to solve the crimes and rescue the lady fair. Sale's characterization is good but so realistic that he actually becomes distasteful. The picture has as many thrills as an old time melodrama, is equally far-fetched and more gruesome.

RUMBA

In this melodramatic, and exceedingly distasteful, musical extravaganza, George Raft impersonates a lowbrow cabaret dancer in Havana. Through peculiar and improbable circumstances the spoiled heiress of many millions meets him, is infatuated with him and becomes his dancing partner. Though he behaves despically to her she seems to thrive on insults, and the picture ends with the course of true love running smooth. The whole idea is repugnant in the extreme. It is based on false standards, unconventionality and sordid motives, and the glamorous personality of the heroine, the good acting and the smooth direction, only add to the demoralizing influence of the production.

THE RIGHT TO LIVE

A drawing room drama of weak plot and dubious moral, redeemed only by the exceptionally capable acting of everyone in the cast. The story concerns two brothers who are devoted to each other. When one of them is crippled in an airplane accident, he appoints his handsome brother to provide his wife with the night life and gay company which he feels is due her youth and beauty. This precipitates the obvious situation. Evidently intended as a vehicle for the legitimate stage, the picture is made entirely of dialogue over a psychological situation. It is fair entertainment.

THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL
Leslie Howard, Merle Oberon, Nigel Bruce. Produced by Alexander Korda — London Films, Ltd. From the novel by Baroness Orczy. United Artists.

Against the exciting, dramatic background of the French Revolution, a band of English conspirators, led by a clever and charming daredevil, cheat the Republic of some of its most distinguished victims. It is an absorbing commentary on manners and morals of the time placed in a romantically satisfying atmosphere. Those who have read the book will find that the plot has been followed with unusual fidelity, and, though done in a leisurely manner, it moves with admirable coherence and cumulative interest. The characters succeed in making the French Revolution live again in all its crude bloodiness, its wasteful cruelty, its extravagance and its redeeming qualities of hope and faith. The thought of how much of real value was thoughtlessly and savagely destroyed through indiscriminate mob action and mass emotion is one that is worth broadcasting through the modern world. The whole is a vivid and exciting dramatic experience.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY » »
Helen Hays, Robert Montgomery, Otto Kruger, May Robson. From the novel by Hugh Walpole; adaptation by Lenore Coffee. Direction by William K. Howard. M-G-M.
Hugh Walpole's distinguished novel has been so widely read that it is impossible to judge the picture version without bias. The interpretation of the Code has forced alteration of the plot with the result that much of the force of the original and the deeper significance of the character studies involved are lost. It is, however, a thoughtful drama of thwarted love. The large and prosperous Herries family take an exaggerated interest in the romance of two of its younger members, Vanessa and Benji, and its attitude complicates the situation disastrously. The theme is placed against the colorful, dignified background of England toward the end of the reign of Queen Victoria. The characterizations are satisfying, and the director has been successful in maintaining an atmosphere of understanding and good taste throughout. It is not a picture which will appeal to youthful audiences but it has interest for mature ones.

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT

Guy Kibbe, Aline Macmahon, Lyle Talbot, Patricia Ellis. Direction by Warner Bros.

A mystery murder story so like innumerable others that it barely rouses any interest in finding out who did kill the two men that were shot on a rainy night while eight or ten people waited for the death of the old gentleman. There is a green elephant in which an important paper is concealed, with trouble always following its disappearance; there is the same dreary questioning of every one in the house with suspicion falling on each, and the same jumping and dashing around before the mystery is solved.

THE WHOLE TOWN’S TALKING

Edward G. Robinson in a dual role is the particular drawing card in this gangster melodrama. Jones, a timid, obstreperous office clerk, is the exact double of a criminal who is No. 1 public enemy of the hour. Complications develop through mistaken identity and the circumstance that Jones falls into the power of his double. Mr. Robinson’s two impersonations are most interesting in their contrasting types. The fact that Jones’ eventual triumph is psychologically implausible somewhat weakens the effect of the good acting, but the picture is nevertheless full of interest and excitement.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR

This is a tremendously interesting picture from the standpoint of aviation and the training of army aviators. It gives the background of early days in flying and progresses to an army flying school with the most up-to-date equipment for the teaching of aviation. It shows in thrilling detail the progress of an aviator’s training from the moment of his arrival at the school until he takes his final tests in individual piloting in the most exciting air manoeuvres. Obedience, esprit de corps, clean living and all angles of army discipline are stressed. For the sake of romance the picture is weakened by the introduction of the hero’s love affair with a woman of questionable morals who nearly succeeds in ruining his career. It is also a matter of regret that the hero is a fresh, cock-sure, conceited and objectionable young man who has nothing to recommend him but a final come back after he has endangered the lives and happiness of his father and friends and narrowly missed entirely disgracing himself. The story descends at moments to maudlin sentimentality but on the whole the good points of the production balance its weaknesses. We believe the picture is worthy of recommendation for its interest as a thrilling exposition of the technique of flying.

HOW TO SELECT MOTION PICTURES

By EDGAR DALE

(Reprinted with permission of Editors of "Modern Literature")

If you are a typical high school boy living in a city or village where there is a motion picture theatre, you attended about fifty-four movies last year. Girls attended approximately forty-six. If you had rated these movies each time that you went, giving a rating from zero to 10—zero being "the worst movie I ever saw," 10 "the best," 5 "average"—then the average rating, if you are a boy, was 6.7; if a girl, 7.0. Further, last year you would have rated It Happened One Night as the best picture which you saw, and Alice in Wonderland as the worst.

These facts were secured last year in a study of the tastes of high school students. During the year the pupils and teachers in several hundred schools were trying to reach one major goal—discrimination in the selection and evaluation of motion pictures. This in turn was divided into three sub-goals: (1) to make high school students conscious of the influence of motion pictures on the lives of children, young people, and adults; (2) to teach high school students how better to select their movies; (3) to increase enjoyment by teaching high school students to see more at the movies.

What's YOUR System?

My space is limited or I could tell you how we worked on each of these three goals. Let me take one of them, however—"how to select your movies"—and suggest how you can increase your enjoyment of motion pictures by being more discriminating in your attendance. First of all, please fill out the following blank according to the instructions. After you have done this, appoint a committee to tabulate the results. Now you are ready for some good class discussion. I suggest that you go down the list of ways of finding out about a movie. Study the rank that you have given it both as to frequency of use and as to whether it is a good or a poor way.

Item No. 1 on the blank is "I ask my mother." High school students throughout the country gave the following information about the frequency with which they used their mothers as a source of information:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Source of Information</th>
<th>Percentage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Almost never</td>
<td>61.7%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>¼ of the time</td>
<td>14.6%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>½ of the time</td>
<td>7.8%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>¾ of the time</td>
<td>3.1%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Almost always</td>
<td>12.7%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

Why is the mother not frequently used as a source of information about movies? There may be a variety of reasons. Which are they? (1) Lack of attendance and information on motion pictures. (2) Differing standards of judging motion pictures. (3) Parental disapproval of motion picture attendance. Can anything be done about this situation, or is the low rank of the mother as a source of information merely an indication that you are sufficiently mature to make these judgments without parental guidance?

The same approach can be used, of course, with Item No. 2, "I ask my father." Let's drop down for further illustration to No. 10, "I look at lists of recommended motion pictures like those published in Parents' Magazine and Educational Screen." The percentage using this method was as follows:
Motion Picture Reviews

- Almost never ........................................ 64.6%
- ¼ of the time....................................... 16.2%
- ½ of the time....................................... 34%
- ¾ of the time....................................... 3.8%
- Almost always ...................................... 5.8%

Again you could build a good class discussion around these questions: (1) What are the strengths and weaknesses of these lists of recommended pictures? (2) Are they really impartial? (3) Are they sufficiently concerned with the entertainment value of DIRECTIONS.—Where do you get information about the movies you plan to attend? Below is a list of ways in which you can find out about movies. Look at the first statement. It says, "To get information about a movie I am thinking of attending, I ask my mother." Do you ask your mother? If you almost never ask your mother for information about a movie you are thinking of attending, put a check mark in the first column. If you ask her about ¼ of the time you go to the movies, put a check mark in the second column. If you ask her about ½ of the time, put a check mark in the third column. If you ask her about ¾ of the time, put a check mark in the third column. If you almost always ask her, put a check mark in the fifth column. Now read the next statement and mark it in the same way. Then mark the third statement, and so on until you have marked all the statements.

motion pictures, or do they overemphasize the possible harm that might come from viewing certain motion pictures? (4) How might these recommending services be improved? At this point you might even frame a letter to be sent to these magazines or others of this type. Such a letter would give the results of your deliberations to the editor.

Clearly, there is room for a great deal of shift here, and I am sure that you will find it very profitable and interesting to study these reviews.

A study of reviews discloses two types: one the “blurb” which merely follows a meaningless formula over and over again; and the other, a good review which points out significant phases of photography, direction, settings, cutting, dialogue, or the social value of the film. With a little practice your class will be able to detect a “blurb” review from an honest one nearly every time. Let’s try it out. I am going to give a few sentences from both blurbs and reviews of a higher type. Each review will be given a number. Write on a piece of paper which you judge it to be, blurb or honest. The correct answers are given at the end of this article.

1. A very gripping but somber story. It presents with sympathy and understanding the helplessness of the man and woman at the bottom of the social and economic strata. The staging is nearly fine; the acting above the average; the appeal very modern.

2. Glorious entertainment — fast, furious fun — daring, diverting delineations — smart, sophisticated settings — an entrancing ensemble swimming about in a mischievous madcap muddle. The peak production of the present season.

3. A ruthless tale of life in the raw—vivid, dramatic, thrilling, tense—a magnificent entertainment you will never forget. It’s the terrific drama of the underworld, vitalized into a wonder film by this famous producer. Vivid! Virile! Realistic!

4. The atmosphere is well sustained in the fine settings; the acting is quietly effective. In following the novel, the play has possibly adopted too much the leisurely motion of a book of many chapters, and the story seems too long in coming to a close. It will, however, linger in the memory when many pictures are forgotten.

5. An entertainment so absorbing that it literally casts a spell over every audience. You’ll laugh—you’ll cry. The heroine rises to stellar heights and proves her amazing versatility in a role that fits her like a glove.

6. This is probably one of the poorest pictures that has appeared in the last year; it may even be THE poorest. Its so-called humor depends upon a perpetually drunken millionaire and a janitor with a Swedish accent, but their efforts to entertain are fruitless in this creaking relic of the slap-stick era.

7. Here is presented another chain gang plot featuring an escaping criminal. The audience is expected to approve of his escape because of the brutality of the treatment he receives. The picture is immoral, unoral, and anti-social. The action throughout is exaggerated, and the cruelty is so revolting and horrible that it defeats its purpose.

8. A stirring drama of tangled loves and lives—that holds one spellbound in rapt attention—as the action unfolds a story as true to life as your own romance. It’s the romantic story of a dainty, fragile blonde, a mischievous imp of a girl, a lily from the gutter, glorified by a great love; a gamine of the streets whose beauty goes straight to your heart—to fascinate you and hold you—as it did the man she loved.

9. Beauty, drama, witty dialogue, smart settings — and this famous actress in her most finished portrayal of a brilliant woman of the modern world. A vivid, glowing human drama of tangled hearts, and of a woman who scorned to accept love at the cost of another’s happiness.

10. This is an exceptionally interesting picture. It is another war story, but is unusual because it deals with the psychology of a torturer, and the undermining power of apparently successful warfare. It creates no enemy attitude, but shows honestly the bitter futility of being forced to kill one’s fellow men. The picture would have been more consistent had the final tragedy not been softened by a sentiment-cliché.

I do not know how well you have succeeded in picking out the honest reviews from the ones which are merely written to influence you to go to the picture. Perhaps in one or two cases there is room for an honest argument. I am sure, however, that if you learn to tell one kind of review from the other, and to demand honest reviews, you are more likely to get them. Study and compare the reviews which appear in Time, Liberty, Judge, Life, Vanity Fair, the New Republic, Parents’ Magazine, the Educational Screen, and others.

Thus far I have dealt only with selection of pictures based on your present standards for motion pictures. But are these standards satisfactory? Could they be improved? Here are some of the standards that high school students said were of much importance before they studied motion picture appreciation and after such study. It reads like this: 93.6 per cent of high school students used acting as a standard before the study of motion picture appreciation; 94.5 per cent, after; a change of .9 per cent.

Photography and direction made the most pronounced shifts. Evidently there are many sources of enjoyment at these points not yet experienced by high school students. What standards would your class set up in regard to each of these points? Here is an example of standards which you might set up in regard to the Plot or Story:

1. A good motion picture story must really do what it sets out to do.
2. The story should be so built that there is a consistent rise in interest from the beginning of the picture until the climax.
3. A well-constructed motion picture should not be hard to follow.
4. Any problem which is presented in a serious motion picture should be presented accurately.
5. Such a picture might end happily or unhappily, as long as the ending is logical.
6. Humor in motion pictures should not be consistently built up at the expense of certain races or nationalities.

7. Further, the humor should fit naturally into the situation and should not be used merely as relief.
8. One of the most important things the motion picture can do is to show you truthfully the consequences that come from making certain choices in life.

Do you agree with these standards? If not, revise them to fit the judgments of your class.

Now set up a project in which you develop similar standards for the other phases of the motion picture. These activities will be your first step in the development of an intelligent, discriminating appreciation of motion pictures.

The honest reviews are: Nos. 1, 4, 6, 7, 10.
The “blurbs” are: Nos. 2, 3, 5, 8, 9.

FEATURE FILMS

CAR NUMBER 99

A young police recruit, assisted by the police radio system, catches a band of experienced thieves. The picture holds one interested because of the swift-moving plot, the outstanding characters and the excitement attendant upon racing cars, police broadcasts, etc. The situations contrasting the old time country sheriff and the modern police officers lend humor to the plot while a wholesome story contrasts favorably with the hectic uncertainties of banditry. It gives an interesting insight into the operations of the Michigan State Police and some of the methods they employ to trap criminals.

CHAPAYEV

An American critic of a foreign film done in a foreign language is at a great disadvantage. In this picture, though about fifty percent of the dialogue is translated, many little asides and minor comments are lost upon the audience, who with little more than the visual sense to guide them, may go far astray in interpreting the picture’s message. Probably this film has less international significance than other Russian productions shown in this country. It is basically a character study of Chapayev the peasant who, inspired by Lenin is impelled to lead his fellow peasants in Guerilla warfare against the White Russians. The story presents graphic scenes of fighting, closeups of Russian types, generals behind the lines planning battles while playing immortal classies upon the piano, and the hungry resentful infantry. The strength of the picture lies in the vividness of these characterizations; its rather hazy continuity which fails to make clear, at least to an American audience, the fate of the hero and the outcome of the conflicts. Though undoubtedly interesting, it leaves one with a sense of dissatisfaction tinted with bewilderment.

CLIVE OF INDIA

Ronald Colman, Loretta Young, Francis Luster, Lumsden Hare. Direction by Richard Boleslawsky. Twentieth Century United Artists.

The film is of unusual historical interest. It concerns itself with Robert Clive, the national hero who distinguished himself by establishing England’s East India Company, fighting many battles against tremendous odds. The love story, used as background, is a sweet and simple one, very refreshing and charming. Loretta Young as the lovely wife and Ronald Colman are very satisfying although the picture seems a trifle long in spite of fine production values. The battle scenes are rather realistic and terrifying for younger children.

CASINO MURDER CASE

For those who rate entertainment in terms of excitement, this will contain the requisite number of thrills. It is another detective story about a now well-known hero, the American counterpart of Sherlock Holmes, and it affords opportunity to those who have not read the book, to test their own powers of observation—for analysis of motives and its reaction in a household where high ideals have no part and ethical standards are absent. Suspicion falls alike on the just and unjust, with sustained mystery and suspense and well placed humor. The solution is reached suddenly, naturally and dramatically. It is good of its type.

DEATH FLIES EAST

In this mystery murder melodrama aboard a transcontinental plane the plot is thickened to the point of muddiness with almost all the ingredients known to mystery writers. When several people die of poison all the passengers are under suspicion and the audience is given a glimpse into the private lives of some of them. The heroine is a girl who has violated her parole from a penitentiary in order to fly east to obtain a confession which will prove her innocence, and the hero is a young man who is taking a secret munition formula to Washington. The story is incoherent and the ending hazy. It is considerably below average in entertainment value.

THE DEVIL IS A WOMAN

(Caprice Espanol)

Students of cinematography will probably be the audiences most appreciative of von Sternberg's latest picture. The director is past master in the art of creating mood and settings. Lighting, photography and musical accompaniment are used with unusual success toward this objective. One may or may not like "La Dietrich" but it will be difficult to forget her or her vehicle because of the way in which the story is told. The story itself is hardly worth telling. It is tawdry and dramatically weak. In Spain in the early part of the century, a predatory cigarette girl attracts an army officer and through the following years continues to cast her spell and ruin him. The photographic details and pantomime are unusual and fascinating. The music, very beautiful. But the production cannot fail to draw criticism.

DON QUIXOTE

Here is art; a beautiful blending of artistic photography, music and imagination in this unusual adaptation of an old classic to pictorial presentation. Not only these qualities and the superb acting of the two main characters give this picture distinction, but the attention to minor details; the townspeople, carefully chosen types, the landscape, even the animals who participate in the story, lend it charm and a peculiar kind of dignity seldom found in the movies. It is a picture which will delight the intellectual theatre goer. In a series of exquisitely beautiful scenes, it tells the story of the most famous megalomaniac of literature, through his fantastic, absurd adventures to a final sequence of rare distinction, where his great library of classics is burnt and the camera catches the destruction of each book, page by page. Chaliapin is a splendid actor and the comedy of his portrayal is subtly tinged with tragedy. His gorgeous voice is a treat for music lovers.

FOLIES BERGERE

This is probably the best vehicle Chevalier has had in American films since his engaging "Innocents of Paris." As an amusing, light hearted yagband entertainer in the Folies his role is reminiscent of his past successes, but he plays a dual role appearing also as the polished, suave Baron Cassine, a personage important in Parisian financial and social circles. This characterisation is new to us and he does it very cleverly. It is a gay farce, with sophisticated dialogue, spectacular ballets and delightful songs.

THE GHOST WALKS  »  »
In spite of shrieks, murders, strange disappearances, lunatics and a haunted house, this ghost story is neither blood curdling nor entertaining. It is about a playwright who attempts to sell a horror play to a producer by hiring a haunted house in which to stage it. The performance gets out of hand before the evening is over and the play almost becomes a reality. The idea is not bad but it seems to have been ineptly handled.

CIGOLETTE  »  »
A girl who has been brought up in luxury is left penniless, goes to New York to look for work and becomes hostess in a cheap night club. Drinking scenes and the exposure of the night club racket make the picture sophisticated though it is not really distasteful ethically. The acting is sincere but not spectacular, and the direction is good enough to give the mediocre story the appearance of being more important than it really is.

THE HOOSIER SCHOOL MASTER  »  »
A stereotyped picture of post Civil War days with a rural background. Both plot and characters follow a stock, rather than an original, pattern, through slow moving sequences. A discharged soldier seeking government land, becomes a teacher in an Indiana village school. The townspeople, resentful of soldiers' intrusion, make life miserable until justice is triumphant. An opportunity for comparison with present day economic problems is weakened by the dull presentation of these problems.

A trivial farce in which a temperamental movie star and a young engaged couple, who are saving money to open a taxi stand, are involved in a series of contretemps. I'LL LOVE YOU ALWAYS  »  »
After a brief courtship, two young people marry and go to the big city. In desperation at his failure to find a position, the man steals some money. Though he expiates his crime with a prison term, the subsequent reactions of the others involved are magnanimous to the point of rewarding outstanding weakness with the same prizes that are ordinarily supposed to be won by strength and merit. The solution of the economic problem holds implications that might easily weaken the moral fibre of many young people who are in the same desperate straits. The love story, because of its human appeal and sympathetic portrayals by the actors tend to mitigate the sentimentality, but even the love story suffers because it is so often sacrificed for emotional effect.

LES MISERABLES  »  »
Mr. W. P. Lipscomb has made a superlative screen story from the famous novel by Victor Hugo. Indicting the inhuman applications of the letter of the law in the case of a man who stole a loaf of bread and was sentenced to the galleys, the story tells of the heart-breaking struggle of this man to escape his past. It is powerful, dramatic and inspiring. Frederic March as Jean Val Jean, the escaped convict, and Charles Laughton in the role of Javert, inexorable servant of the Law, are superb. Richard Boleslawski's direction is peculiarly sensitive and for once the use of closeups has made appreciation of character delineation so intimate a revelation that this technique adds to rather than detracts from interest in the action. Charles Laughton's Javert will not easily be forgotten. It seems to us that he presents a perfect interpretation of the psychology which made the man the relentless instrument of unimaginative unyielding law, and yet he succeeds too in winning an unwilling sympathy for the completely sinister villain. Frederic March gives a very fine study of Jean, a character who grows, through varied experiences, into a man inspired by a spiritual motive. The lesser roles are splendidly portrayed; the picture is an event not to be missed.

LITTLE MEN
Erin O'Brien Moore, Ralph Morgan, Junior Durkin, Tad Alexander, Cora Sue Collins. Direction by Phil Rosen. Mascot.

In this screening of Louisa May Alcott's book, adaptation and direction both preserve very well the spirit of the original. It could not be so good as "Little Women" because the "Little Men" is one of the less interesting and less important of Miss Alcott's novels, but it does succeed in being a pleasant, sincere and wholesome story with a real appeal to children. Its sentimentality is not quite in tune with our times but its ideals are those which we hope still prevail.

LADDIE

A charming, sentimental picture which has accurately caught the spirit of the book from which it is adapted. The nobility of farming and the solidarity of family life are the general themes which form the background for the sweet, simple romance of a farmer's son and the daughter of an embittered Englishman whose hurt pride is finally healed in happier surroundings. The time is the middle of the 19th century and much of the charm of the picture is due to the settings, costumes and customs of that day. Excellent family entertainment.

LITTLE FRIEND

American films rarely treat themes as subjectively as European ones. This is the more apparent in the stories of childhood which we have seen, as exemplified in the French film "Poil de Carrot" and in this fine English production. It is an amazingly astute picture of a child's reaction to a broken home. By their self-centered and thoughtless behavior, the parents bring agonizing suffering to the child who loves them both and is loved by them. Nova Philbeam is a most unusual actress and her performance is sensitive and beautiful. The picture has exceptional interest for adult audiences.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT
Franchot Tone, Una Merkel, Conrad Nagel. From the play, "Order Please," by Edward Childs Carpenter. Direction by Jack Conway. M-G-M.

A young man from Wyoming encounters more than he bargained for when he comes to New York to look for a suitable wife, for having registered at a hotel for the night, he unwittingly becomes involved in a murder mystery. The picture is a light comedy, well acted and abundantly supplied with humor by Una Merkel and Franchot Tone. PRINCESS O'HARA

The heroine of this piece is an innocent young girl whose father drives a one-horse cab in New York, and the hero is a handsome sophisticate, owner of a taxi service and a night club. It takes a taxi war, horse stealing, race track sequences, the domestic trials of the "princess" and her small brothers and sisters and a cab horse suffering from pneumonia to complete the picture. If it was originally a good story it is sadly changed in the adaptation, for unless audiences enjoy its particular brand of insanities it will bore them intensely.

Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor, Roscoe Karnes, Henry Kolker, Frankie Darrow. Direction by D. Ross Lederman. First National.

As the title indicates this is a story of automobile racing. It has the usual exciting scenes of crowds of spectators and the thrills of a close race. Rivalry between two drivers for the affections of a girl, unfair tactics employed by the villain, and the faith of one young mechanic in the honesty of the driver who is thought to have been crooked furnish the motives in the drama. It is fair entertainment of its kind.

Charles Laughton, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young. Story by Harry Leon Wilson. Direction by Leo McCarey. Paramount.

This priceless comedy, ranging from the ridiculous to the sublime, is a huge success and one's reaction to its uproarious episodes is a tribute to the able cast and the fine interpretation of the roles. Charles Laughton gives a memorable characterization of Ruggles, the English valet, with the inhibitions inherent in his social class, who is put up as a stake in a poker game and is lost to an American. He is taken to America (a country of savages, as he describes it) and there he is gradually pervaded with the idea of equality and finally wins for himself a place in the world of independent men and women. Mr. Laughton's versatility is given wide scope, and Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zasu Pitts and the inimitable Roland Young are especially well cast. It affords excellent entertainment.

TIMES SQUARE LADY » »
Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce, Helen Twelve-trees, Isabel Jewell, Nat Pendleton, Pinky Tomlin. Direction by George B. Seitz. M-G-M.

Just why this story should have been allowed to go through to production is mystifying. The story itself has no value and the acting does nothing to redeem it. It concerns the activities of a gang of crooked sportmen who, when their leader dies, find that all his business properties have been left to a daughter out in Iowa. She comes to New York to take charge, discovers that the hockey team, the dog races, etc., are all crooked, makes a mild gesture of disapproval and then elopes to Europe with the head of the ring. All the scenes feature "double-crossing" as an interesting racket, and the opposing groups of crooks, shooting at each other from automobiles as they race down country roads, furnish the element of excitement. The comedy element (totally unrelated to the plot) is as cheap and banal as the main theme and could entertain only the most primitive type of audience.

THE WEDDING NIGHT » »

When financial pressure causes a young author and his wife to abandon their gay, sophisticated New York life and retire to a Connecticut farm the stage is set for a rural tragedy, for the wife soon returns to the city and the author finds in a Polish milk-maid, the daughter of a neighbor, his inspiration for a novel. As might be foreseen a love affair develops which leads to inevitable tragedy for the girl. The story is somewhat theatrical in its handling and does not ring quite true. Interesting for its sequences dealing with the old country customs of the Polish farmers, it is otherwise undistinguished. It is unpleasant in its implications and rather apathetically acted.

FOREWORD

With the permission of the author we are quoting a talk given on the radio program of the California Congress of Parents and Teachers. It is particularly in line with our belief that one of the most important and practical ways of securing better pictures in the future is to train children from the beginning to appreciate and enjoy good pictures, to develop their critical faculties in order that they may select what is good and reject what is bad.

THE YOUNG CHILD AND THE MOTION PICTURE

By ANN HARRIS

Third Grade Teacher, Second Street School, Los Angeles

Pioneers in the field of Motion Picture Appreciation are apt to dismiss the young child by saying that he has no place in the motion picture theatre. Be that as it may, every Sunday, in our district, finds him there. The father is not able to provide him room to play—either inside or outside, but he can often provide a dime with which to send him to the Sunday show. What is to be done about it? First, one can lead him to an awareness of the other sources of enjoyment within his environment such as the newspaper, the radio, the library, and the park.

Then he can be lead to exercise discrimination about the photoplays that he does see. At first, he will be hazy as to the title, the star, and the continuity of the cinema he has attended. Gradually he realizes that blindly paying a dime into the box office and taking what comes—is as intelligent as asking for a dime's worth of candy and taking anything, when he knows very well that some kind are better than others.

Monday morning reviews of the Sunday shows had continued all last term until on the 21st of February we were fortunate enough to have the opportunity of viewing three comedies. Six reels of comedy for everyone gave us our first real chance to do something with motion picture appreciation. Usually since not more than five saw the same picture, discussion was very difficult.

If you could only have heard the laughter of those children. Not a move did Charlie Chaplin make, but the children caught it, understood, and laughed. Here in pantomime they found a common background of meanings sadly lacking in a group of eight, nine, and ten-year olds composed of two Armenians, two Japanese, four Russians, five Jewish, one Irish, and fourteen Mexicans.

Laughter is as foreign to the daily lives of these children as they themselves are—to you. Current events bring out incidents such as the following: From Armenian Ben, age 10, "That was my uncle that jumped off the bridge yesterday. He hadn't been long from Armenia. Someone stole his truck. He couldn't work."

From Russian Tanya, age 8: "A Russian man killed his wife and her friend on the way to work this morning. Right down there—we saw them. They were dead."

When tragedy walks by one's side, when one has not enough to eat or wear—one must laugh—if one is to live.

So it was that this was a gala day in our lives. After each child had written up the comedy that he had enjoyed the most—he shared his story with the group—seated around the tables. As each child read, we laughed together again in remembrance. A tally was kept as the stories were read. At the end, the score stood: Our Gang, 9; Charlie Chaplin, 12, and Harold Lloyd, 5.

Now came the question as to what made a comedy good. "A good comedy must be funny, but not silly," averred Marjorie, age 8.

In explaining the difference between silly and funny—Armenian Charles asserted: "Silly is something they just make up. Funny is something that is real, and they act it funny."

The championing of favorites began with Alvin: "Harold Lloyd is the best because he does good acts. When he slips, he slips good."

"Charlie Chaplin didn't have to have as many subtitles as Harold Lloyd, because Charlie Chaplin can show better what he means without subtitles." Rivah, age 8.

"Speaking of subtitles," interrupted Shirley, "wasn't Harold Lloyd a talkie?" Then as the children laughed, she insisted, "Well, of course, Our Gang was—a talkie."

That child hadn't missed sound at all.

Then Armenian Charles summarized Charlie Chaplin's creed: "Charlie Chaplin can explain things silently."

"Our Gang is best for children, though," insisted Mexican Martha, "because it has so many children in it."

"It isn't good for children because they want to do what they see. They shouldn't have taken up that sign," began Lorraine, age 8, and before she could finish there came a flood of condemnation of the gang for the things they had done—that they shouldn't have done.

"When you see one or two good children in a movie, it makes you want to be good," summarized Rivah. "The Gang doesn't make you want to be good—it makes you want to be mischievous."

"Let's all go to the same movie this week-end," suggested Rivah. For the first time in six months—a child had seen the value for purposes of discussion—of everyone deciding on the best picture in the neighborhood and seeing it. Some had already chosen Eddie Cantor for this week-end. The succeeding week-end—it was Laurel and Hardy; and this week-end, it is to be Silly Symphonies that will form the basis for discussion. Thus we have been led into a thorough discussion of comedy in general, which is common to all movie programs.

With 100% attendance at our special matinee of David Copperfield on April 8, we can start on another type of photoplay.

All of this has been related to prove again that if a child is old enough to go to a movie, he is old enough to have developed within an appreciative awareness of the values to be found in fine photoplays.

BEYOND BENGAL » »

Produced by Harry Schenck.

The producer of this jungle travelogue assures us that no shot is faked. It is an authentic version of the experiences of a group of adventurers who went out to hunt and to outline the possibilities of getting a railroad into the interior at some future time. A bacteriologist accompanied the expedition and succeeded in preparing a serum to combat the deadly jungle fever which is more dangerous to white men than the wild animals. With a huge safari of natives, carriers, skilled hunters and elephants gathered through the cooperation of His Highness Suah Perak, the party had many thrilling adventures, crossing wild and beautiful country and filming rare and unusual animals. The picture also gives a very interesting impression of the character of the natives, their courage, loyalty and religious faith. It is entertaining and well worth while.

According to movie ethics one repentant soul is ideal material for a heroine. In this case a young lady who works in an unscrupulous lawyer’s office does her best to emulate his shoddy tactics. She conducts the defense for a criminal whom she knows to be guilty and is jubilant at his acquittal until he ungratefully shoots her friend. Repentance then sets in, and all ends in a haze of rosy light. The picture is so unconviningly done that its message is of little importance.

BABY FACE HARRINGTON

This is a film to chase away the glooms and substitute a merry hour of entertainment. The actors seem to be enjoying their parts and are so natural that one is never conscious of the director’s guiding hand, while there are unexpected twists in the story to keep one alert for succeeding events. Charles Butterworth is a slow-witted door-mat of a man who secretly aspires to be a bon vivant; Una Merkel is his wife who endeavors to push him forward. Through a series of misunderstandings he is given a press reputation as Public Enemy Number Two. Then Fate takes a hand to reverse the situation, and he mounts the coveted pedestal of success. It is refreshing comedy to the last scene.

THE BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN

We are told by psychologists that the basis of all fear is the unknown, the inexplicable. If this is true and one could believe in the existence of such a monster as Frankenstein, a picture such as “The Bride of Frankenstein” would certainly be terrifying. However, it seems to us that only the most impressionable and hysterical persons could overlook the studied mechanics of the production sufficiently to be impressed with a sense of its reality. To us the character created by Karloff is pathetic rather than horrifying. A monster ineptly created by man with some of man’s emotions, capable of suffering yet lacking in the ability to understand why he is shunned and persecuted, he is as violent and dangerous as a hunted animal and just as pitiful. The female created to be his mate appears only at the end of the picture to add the final note of tragedy. Though a monster herself she is just as terrified of Frankenstein as are the human beings. The final catastrophe which destroys them is a blessed release from a hopeless situation. Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, author of the book upon which the picture was based, appears as one of the characters in the prologue and explains that her purpose was to show the evil of man’s presumption in attempting to emulate God. As a tragedy illustrating this theme the picture is a success. The shock to intelligent adult audiences will come from scenes of violence and brutality rather than from the fantastic creatures depicted.

BLACK SHEEP

There’s always a bit of pathos (or, perhaps, bathos) connected with “black sheep.” One is expected to yearn over their misdemeanors and realize that hard luck had more than a small part to play in their status quo. Thus Edmund Lowe gives us a debonnaire example, charming, suave and appealing; Tom Brown, a lovable chap who might easily have joined the herd if a helping hand had not rescued him in the nick of time and set him on a straighter path. While not especially novel or original in theme it is an entertaining program film telling the story of the meeting on an ocean liner returning to New York of a varied group of individuals each playing a dangerous hand in the game of life. It is light, improbable, and rather amusing; deftly photographed and directed, and well cast.

BROKEN MELODY
John Garrick, Merle Oberon, Austin Trevor. Direction by Julius Hogan. Olympic Prod.

An insignificant and dull picture telling the story of a composer-singer and his sweetheart. The composer marries a shallow unfaithful woman, kills her when he discovers her misdeeds, and, after escaping from Devil’s Island, is pardoned to live happily ever after with his former sweetheart and the child of his first wife. Aside from the fairly pleasing voice possessed by the young man playing the composer, this picture offers nothing in the way of beauty or originality.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU » »

George Arliss' Richelieu is a most interesting character, a fascinating combination of cunning statesman, almost diabolical in his ability to penetrate into the schemes of his enemies, dignified churchman, officiating with all the pomp and splendor of his high office, and gentle kindly guardian of those whom he loves. The story concerns the successful efforts of the Cardinal, ambitious for himself as well as for France, to keep the crown for Louis XIII and to prevent Louis' worthless brother, the Queen Mother, and a company of grasping nobles from destroying his dream of a great and unified France. The picture is distinctly worth while in recreating for us the spirit of that tumultuous period in French history when intrigue was at its height and the glittering court life spelled elegance but insecurity. It is exciting melodrama with many critical and tense moments and is softened by the romance of Richelieu's ward. The cast is excellent; Edward Arnold, splendid as Louis XIII, and Violet Cooper most satisfying in the role of Queen Mother. The direction is notable. The picture, though dignified and interesting, lacks the human and emotional appeal of "The House of Rothschild."

THE CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE » »

Not so smart nor so original as "The Thin Man," the general pattern of which it follows, this wisecracking, fast moving detective story still holds one's attention throughout and amuses. It is lavishly set and skillfully photographed, well acted and directed. The hero is a criminal lawyer of whose ethics the less said the better. He fits the mould of the newer type of screen detective whose subtle skill, masked under the manners of a gay dilettante makes the screen minions of the law appear to great disadvantage. Thus it is not adapted to an unsophisticated audience.

DINKY » »

That an unsophisticated picture with a large cast of children is not the whole answer to the demand for family entertainment is proven by this production. It is no doubt a sincere attempt to furnish family or even children’s entertainment but it is not good of its kind. There are almost no really dramatic moments, the plot is based upon an artificial situation, and the whole seems composed chiefly of trivialities. Less fortunately cast than in earlier productions, in this picture Jackie Cooper plays the role of a small boy whose mother is unjustly imprisoned while he is boarding at a military school. Though his mother tries to keep the knowledge of her difficulties from him the story comes to light and the boy voluntarily leaves school to enter an orphanage where social prejudice will not discriminate against him.

A big freighter of the Walker Lines bears a cargo which must arrive in Shanghai on schedule time in order to clinch a valuable contract for the company, a feat which is miraculously accomplished in spite of a near-mutiny, a broken piston, a hair-raising hurricane and imminent shipwreck. The direction is excellent as far as the scenes of sea and crew and life on the ship are concerned; one is definitely carried to China on that hazardous voyage. Far less can be said of the plot. The heroine, who secretly steals aboard, is a type indigenous to the movies, a gilded millionairess, spoiled to the point of nausea, ill-bred, brainless, callous to the suffering of others. If taken literally she is a good argument for Communism. The captain has

G-MEN

Here is a pictorial narrative of the exploits of the notorious Dillinger gang and their final capture by the Federal officers. Regarded as entertainment this picture is almost too brutal and melodramatic to be called diverting, but as a close-up of the methods used by our government to exterminate public enemies it has tremendous value. The story is woven around a young attorney who gives up private practice of the law and joins the Federal Service. Subsequent scenes show the different departments at work in their scientific warfare on crime, and when the ex-attorney and his men go into action against the gang there are horrible pictures of wrecked cars, bleeding bodies and all the dreadful accompaniments of murder. The romance between the hero and the sister of his superior officer is out of tune with the grim tone of the story, but it is fortunately subordinated to the main theme and does not succeed in spoiling the artistic unity of this otherwise starkly realistic drama. The acting is superb throughout; even James Cagney, though still unable to detach himself from the complacent egoism which always dominates his roles, renders himself almost likeable as a courageous and very much buffeted bloodhound of the law. The scenes of horror and bloodshed are much too nerve-shattering for high-flying persons and are absolutely unsuitable for juveniles, but mature citizens, aware of, but apathetic to the increasing prevalence of crime will be roused to a new sense of civic responsibility and respect for our courageous Federal officers.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD

Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie, Virginia Sale, Raymond Walburn. Direction by Irving Cummings. Fox.

There is something of the quality of "It Happened One Night" in this unpretentious farce comedy. The two stories have a slight similarity, for again a run-away wilful daughter finds her match in a young lawyer whom chance throws in her path. One also may compare the good taste in direction and the naturalness of the homely touches which give the two apparent reality. This plot is absurdly funny because of the predicament in which the two young people find themselves through the avarice of an unethical old rascal who controls every office in the village where they are stranded.

MY HEART IS CALLING

This is a charming musical comedy, particularly distinctive because of excellent music beautifully rendered. It is also lovely in settings and photography. The story revolves around a young aspiring opera singer and his sweetheart, introduced as a stowaway on the ship in which the singer and his company are on their way to Monte Carlo to fill an engagement which is cancelled while they are en route. Their ultimate success after many disappointments is a satisfactory finale as they have quite captivated the audience by their humor, fine acting and marvelous voices. The continuity is sacrificed at times to hilarious and rather boisterous comedy, but the production is entirely worthwhile and entertaining and has been directed with imaginative skill resulting in a performance both amusing and stimulating.

MR. DYNAMITE

For certain motion picture patrons "wise-cracking" Edmund Lowe may elevate this picture from the limbo to which it justly belongs. It is a mediocre, confused story of the solution of the murders of a musician of some note, his step-son and his secretary. The whole atmosphere is cheap and unwholesome and not conducive to public confidence, since the stupid police remain ineffectual until the crime is brought to light by a crooked detective.

THE PEOPLE'S ENEMY

The plot deals with organized crime and criminal lawyers, with prisons and parole boards, and shows the clever subterfuge which goes on in all classes of society to shield criminals. The theme may be justified because it emphasizes the necessity of ending the menace of sentimental parole boards and of encouraging the Federal Government in its protection of the public. It is well directed and well acted, especially by Melvyn Douglas.

PRIVATE WORLDS

Closely following the book from which it is adapted, this is a photoplay with a strong accent on the psychological although there is no dearth of exciting and dramatic climaxes. The setting is a hospital for mental cases. There are four leading characters, a woman psychiatrist, the hospital superintendent who is placed in charge over the head of the leading resident doctor, this doctor and his wife who is herself a neurotic and forms the link between the worlds of madness and of sanity. Their personal lives and their dealings with their patients are shown in vivid action. It is a magnificently directed picture, the material is intelligently handled and the acting is exceptionally good. Because of its theme, however, it may not appeal to popular taste.

RECKLESS

We doubt that even the combination of "box office" stars will be able to write this picture on the success side of the ledger, for the jumpy continuity, and jumbling of social problems with musical extravaganza, have resulted in a production which should be wilder and bore even the less critical spectators. The plot is shallow and tawdry in suggesting the "whitewashing" of a recent notorious newspaper "heroine." The dénouement is saccharine sentimentality. It seems to us a step backward in the art of cinematography to have produced so inartistic a picture and a breach of taste to have cast Miss Harlow in such a role.

THE RUNAWAY QUEEN

Romance in a mythical kingdom is the material from which this light farce is concocted. The Queen is a young woman who has been clerking in a New York department store unaware of her accession to the throne. When she returns to her country she finds a revolution in progress and of course falls in love with the leader of the hostile forces. As a farcical treatment of monarchies and revolutions it is entertaining but it lacks glamor and is not especially well cast.

STOLEN HARMONY

It is a little confusing to find so bewildering a medley of tragedy, comedy, music and romance in one production. It could be found only in a movie, we are sure. George Raft appears as a slick haired musician who is trying to live down a prison experience. He is given a job in Ben Bernie's band and we follow him on a series of one night stands. This part is gay, amusing and musical. Then the mood changes when the lawless gangsters try to embroil their ex-mate in their activities and it becomes exciting melodrama. For adult audiences who enjoy the type of entertainment "The Old Maestro" offers in music and chatter the picture will probably have strong appeal in spite of the gangster scenes.

But the picture is overstimulating for younger audiences.

This is a really interesting picture which concerns two college graduates, grandsons of a steel magnate, whose fathers attempt to guide them into their chosen lines of work. STRANGERS ALL

"Strangers All" contains many ingredients which will win popular approval. May Robson, in one of her best performances of several years, takes the part of the mother of a heterogenous family of young people, whose ambitions and desires lead to alarming consequences. It is only through her force of character and understanding of individual problems that she is able to bring them safely through their difficulties. The weak point of the picture occurs in the court scene, when one of the sons has become involved in Communist activities and is brought to trial. This scene is overdramatized at the expense of reality and respect for the judicial functions of government.

MOTION PICTURE APPRECIATION IN THE SCHOOLS

by
SARAH McLEAN MULLEN

AUTHOR OF "HOW TO JUDGE MOTION PICTURES"

"So you are going to teach my kids to get more of a kick out of motion pictures, are you?" asked a skeptical father of me when I sent out the first announcement to the homes, that Lincoln High School, among others, was going to teach Motion Picture Appreciation. "My kids get enough of a kick now. They raise the roof playing bandits and cowboys even though they are in junior high school. And my lady daughter imitates every movie heroine she sees till the boys get sick and tired of it. Why in the name of sense do you want to teach motion picture appreciation in the schools?"

I explained as well as I could that the chief purposes were to train students to select wisely, to teach them to evaluate whatever pictures they saw in terms of established criteria, and finally to support good pictures and avoid the bad. After a ten week experiment, in which his children discovered what magazines or other sources could be relied upon for cinematic reviews, and what constitutes a good picture, that same father came to me to say that I had had an unseen and silent student taking the course. He had followed our class program and he was convinced that every father and mother ought either to take such a course or to read some of the articles we had suggested. This change of attitude from scoffing, to one of conviction in support of the idea of instruction in motion picture appreciation, has been almost the universal result, wherever organized class instruction has been the plan.

As a school subject Motion Picture Appreciation is practically in its infancy, although it has been formally accepted as part of the state curriculum of instruction in eight states, including Ohio, Iowa, Connecticut, North Carolina, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and New York as well as California. The grades in which instruction may be given vary from kindergarten through the last year of college.

In the high schools, this interesting subject may be taught in a variety of ways. It may consist of a separate unit of two weeks, five weeks, or ten weeks in length; or it may extend over a number of weeks, twenty or forty for example, and be emphasized only one day or two during each week or during each fortnight. It may be continued throughout the entire high school course in a spiral fashion, touching again and again upon the same topics, as applied to contemporary films or allied interests. Still another method is through clubs, of either curricular or extra-curricular nature, where the enthusiasm of a group for motion pictures motivates the club activities.

Motion Picture Reviews

English teachers may choose the subject of motion pictures as a center of interest for oral or written composition or for comparative treatment of literature. It lends itself equally to journalism as a vital subject for various forms of class work, to public speaking, and to dramatics. Social Science classes may study the motion pictures as a potent medium of communication for the expression of ideas, as an interpretation of personal performance of an individual, of social conditions of various eras and geographical localities and peoples, or as a visible record of historical periods. Art teachers will find it a valuable subject in relation to the activity of artists and artisans connected with cinema production. Costume design, architecture, interior decorating, and photography of true worth are represented in many current films each year. Study of music, an almost inseparable element of pictures, might well be utilized by teachers in developing a greater appreciation of this phase. While only the most obvious functions of the teaching of Motion Picture Appreciation are mentioned here, it is apparent that such a course may become a strong integrating force in teaching academic subjects.

Furthermore, there are few, if any, more effective and vital methods for instruction aiming at character training than through discussion by class members with the teacher, of selected pictures. Film versions presenting definite problems of human behavior and suggested solutions bring a greater understanding of character traits, motives, and goals.

The continuous change and flow of pictures makes impossible a static approach to the subject of motion picture appreciation. Only the recognized fundamentals of successful play structure and performance can be given as facts, and even these are subject to change, as studio techniques are being constantly perfected. The chief interest lies in the adaptation of established rules to appreciation of current pictures and in attempting to deduce new principles from examples of successful adventuring and experimentation. Courses in appreciation of art, drama, literature, and music have become established as school subjects. It remains for the pioneer of today to work out courses in the most universal of all arts, the motion picture.

Originally, the subject was introduced into the high school curriculum, through the activity of the National Council of Teachers of English under Dr. William Lewin of Newark, New Jersey. This group published study guides of various motion pictures, including “Alice in Wonderland,” “Little Women,” and “Treasure Island.” During the past year, publication has been continued through the assistance of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and of Columbia University Press. Late this spring, a committee has been formed in the Department of Secondary Schools of the National Education Association, again under the guidance of the pioneer, Dr. Lewin. Some of the members of his present committee were members of the original experimental group (among them, the writer). The other members have been drawn from fields of history, music, art, and language.

The first study guide of this group is the one put out for “Les Miserables.” It contains questions suitable for history, foreign language, literature, and dramatic classes, and a dramatic selection for radio presentation, which, in Los Angeles, was presented by the Senior Dramatics class of Abraham Lincoln High School over KMTR.

Class study is not limited to study guides. In some schools, regular debates, round table, or panel discussions are held on all phases of production, distribution, and exhibition.

The technical side of picture production, from scenario writing through acting, photographing, editing and cutting are investigated by individuals and reported upon either in class or in clubs as part of the group activities. Bulletin boards, newspaper columns, and public speeches provide media for students to express their findings and opinions to their fellow-students and communities.

In some districts a very close relationship has been established between the class studying the subject and similar committees of club women. Through this tie-up, constructive measures toward better theatre conditions in the community have been worked out. Students of the motion picture soon become well aware of the restrictions of zoning codes, of double billing and block-booking. There students, as well as older groups, are working to make available good pictures at all times.

The new education emphasizes development of the boy or girl as a student, of course, but also as a constructive participant in community activities. Handled wisely, class work based on motion pictures presents a rich field for educational activity. This new generation will know what makes a good picture, will know how to choose their pictures wisely, and will be vitally interested in support of the good and elimination of the bad because of their class and club work in Motion Picture Appreciation.

AIR HAWKS

This is an absorbing but grim mystery drama in which a large air line tries to buy out a smaller one that seems a dangerous rival in procuring important air mail contracts. Failing in these negotiations, the larger company destroys several of its competitor's planes by the use of a death ray. The detective work which leads to the discovery of this device adds interest but there is too much tension and tragedy to make good entertainment.

AGE OF INDISCRETION

The title has little accord with this picture which treats of the suffering meted out to a devoted and idealistic husband and a thoroughly lovable small son by a woman whose soul never rises above fine raiment and the social whirl. Smooth direction and an excellent cast combine to give the story depth, sincerity and emotional appeal; one feels that here are real people in real situations of life. It is not a good film for the younger groups, however, as it throws the suspicion of instability upon the one who should be trusted most, and it fails as a commentary on modern conditions of divorce because in only a low percentage of cases is the mother totally devoid of affection for her child.

ALIAS MARY DOW

This story seems assembled rather than written. The author summons for his purpose certain popular themes such as kidnapping, thwarted mother love and the dance hall girl with the "heart of gold" and makes them march in plot formation. The result is trashy, supersentimental and without a drop of real life blood. A baby girl is kidnapped from a wealthy home and is never found. Eighteen years later the husband, in order to save his wife's life as she lies in a hospital, hires a dance hall girl to impersonate the lost daughter. There follows a succession of scenes in which we see the girl, torn between her desire for easy money and her love of her old life, alternating between home and cabaret. The foster mother takes her to Europe (for no apparent reason except to afford pictures of a luxurious liner and a state room submerged in orchids). In the end, a former pal threatens to expose the girl and an unbelievable love story completes the improbable denouement. It is just another emotional melodrama.

BECKY SHARP

The primary interest in this film is, of course, the novelty of color in a picture of feature length. While individual closeups show that a different process of make-up may eventually be necessary, the whole effect is exquisite and one is delighted by the beauty of composition. The story is a fascinating adaptation of Thackeray's classic, portraying a span of years in the life of one of the cleverest and most ruthless women of fiction. Miriam Hopkins is brilliant in the unsympathetic role of Becky, witty, avaricious, scheming, cruel, but giving all the affection of which she is capable to her husband Captain Crawley, admirably played by Alan Mowbray. The whole cast is exceptionally well chosen with special mention due Cedric Hardwicke as the Marquis of Steyne, and Nigel Bruce as Joseph Sedley. The good taste in adaptation and direction is noteworthy. It is decidedly worth while entertainment.

film, remarkably well directed, with Paul Muni, as the central character, contributing an unforgettable portrait of a mine worker. We are informed by good authority that the picture was submitted to both employers and workmen for approval before it was released, a fact which should uphold our opinion, formed after seeing the picture, that it is not intended to present capital and labor problems from a biased viewpoint. With a coal mine for background and a miner for hero it uses the locale and the drama of a strike for the creation of stirring entertainment. When Jo Radek, the miner, is jitled by his girl, he drinks himself into a pugnacious mood and falls prey to the inflammatory talk of men whose racket is fomenting strikes for the purpose of supplying paid strike-breakers. He attempts to lead a rebellion against his union and the events that follow make thrilling drama. Audiences will probably interpret the picture in conformity with their natural sympathies. But whether or not they see in it propaganda to support their theories they will undoubtedly find it a superlatively good movie.

BREAK OF HEARTS

We are unable to be enthusiastic about this new vehicle for Katherine Hepburn much as we should like to be. It is too mechanically plotted, too trite a story, and too unreal. A musical amateur marries a skilled orchestra conductor who has a well-known weakness for the fair sex. After their honey-moon, the inevitable disillusionment comes, and the inevitable degradation of the man and his regeneration follow as per formula. Charles Boyer has all the opportunities in his role; John Beal is sympathetically cast; Miss Hepburn spends her time crying and has little opportunity for her ability. The picture is lavishly set and has interesting musical interludes, but from critical audiences it can evoke only faint enthusiasm.

THE COWBOY MILLIONAIRE

Society drama consort with a Western results in a stupid, unconvincing picture with misplaced accents of humor. ### THE DARING YOUNG MAN

Possibly there would be some excuse for a good satirical comedy lampooning prison conditions and corrupt wardens but there should be no place on any theatre bill for such a wretched pot boiler as this picture. In a prison where the inmates are all on a holiday to escape the police and be free to run the politics of the underworld, a reporter, incognito, gathers facts for a newspaper story. The events are so exaggerated, so silly and so crude that they are not even funny. The whole thing is offensive in its stupidity.

Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall, Henry Stevenson, Louis Hayward, Maureen O'Sullivan. Written and directed by Edmund Goulding. M-G-M.

Delving into medicine and psychiatry with a romantic exponent of the science to lighten its more serious aspects seems to be the popular diversion of the hour if one may judge from recent photoplays. As pseudo-scientific themes go, this picture has a sound one and it most certainly has a charming heroine to take off the curse of deep thinking. A lovely, young and feminine doctor of psychiatry attempts to remove the handicaps of a neurotic, alcoholic youth and thereby plunges herself into a difficult situation. The reasoning seems logical up to a certain point but we suspect that had a real psychiatrist instead of a scenario writer handled the case the young man's fiancée, who was an even more neurotic person, would also have been the object of the doctor's attention and there might not have resulted so romantic a story. The acting is good, the direction smooth and the whole deserving of interest.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL » »

When we enter a theatre and look over the heads of the audience, we may think that the drama is entirely on the stage, but if we could discover what is happening on the backstage of the minds of those who compose that audience, we might find drama of an infinitely more vivid, more complex and more tensely emotional quality. In this play, Mr. Krasna has skilfully called our attention to the audience. He has woven their strangely disassociated lives into an intensely stirring drama of present day America. All of the characterizations are excellent, with special credit being accorded Mr. Barthelmess, who gives probably one of the finest performances of his career. Nervous tension remains high through most of the play and the scenes which make up the climax are particularly harrowing, but the ending strikes a decidedly and satisfactorily lighter note.

Mae West, Paul Cavanaugh, Ivan Lebedeff, Gilbert Enery. Direction by Alex Hall. Paramount.

None of Miss West's later vehicles has attained the interest or originality of "She Done Him Wrong." There was a sincerity and honesty to that vulgar portrayal which was unique. Modern versions of the character seem anachronisms, and even Miss West's most ardent admirers will not find her convincing as a lady of quality into which she is metamorphosed in "Goin' to Town." However her undulating walk, her distinctly individual manner of reading her lines will still attract a certain number who find her different enough to entertain. The lines, as usual, are full of innuendoes, the settings are luxurious, costumes and jewels lavish, the horse race exciting and the operatic episode, ludicrous.

THE GLASS KEY » »
George Raft, Edward Arnold, Claire Dodd. From the story by Dashiell Hammett. Direction by Frank Tuttle. Paramount.

It is difficult to believe that anyone will find entertainment in such a picture as this. So crudely is the story put together that one is not sure until it is half over just what is its theme. At first the emphasis is upon political intrigue; then romance is introduced and finally we find all the characters embroiled in a murder mystery. Through a dreary succession of scenes we see suspects and potential witnesses knocked out of windows, burned in their beds, made helpless with liquor and otherwise subjected to the slap-stick devices of the movie studio. No comment upon the acting is pertinent since not histrionic ability but physical endurance is the qualification for such a picture. It has no value for any audience.

\( GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS \)

In the triple capacity of author, director and actor, George White has evolved an excellent piece of entertainment. It lacks the elaborate dance ensembles seen in recent musical comedies on the screen, but by many people this will not be considered a detrimental omission. The slight plot holding the separate numbers together concerns the fortunes of a boy and girl vaudeville team, imported from the "Sticks" by George White to appear in his show in New York. There is some startlingly good tap dancing by Eleanor Powell, and the talented cast does its share towards making this a very good picture of its type. The costumes and settings are eminently satisfactory.

When a doctor experimenting in the treatment of infantile paralysis in a remote country place saves the life of a wealthy girl who is brought to him for an emergency operation, a three-cornered love story develops with the rich girl and the doctor's assistant as rivals. The plot is confused in that it attempts to develop too many themes; the doctor's methods of healing the victims of infantile paralysis, his problems with hysterical society patients and his personal dilemma when he is tempted to accept the rich girl's bank account instead of the devotion of his assistant. A sensational climax solves his difficulties when a forest fire brings out the true characters of all concerned. The picture is only fair entertainment.

\( THE INFORMER \)

Like many of the plays of the Irish theatre this one establishes a mood which is sombre, unrelieved by lighter strains, yet intensely interesting from a dramatic and artistic point of view. It is the study of the disintegration of a man's soul, of the soul of a Sinn Feiner who betrays his friend for a handful of silver and is hounded by relentless fear and remorse until he begs for mercy in his final hour. Victor McLaglen rises to his opportunity in the difficult role of Gyppo, and the direction is exceptionally fine, but because of the brutality and misery and barren grief the picture will satisfy only a limited audience.

\( THE KEEPER OF THE BEES \)

The simple sweetness of Mrs. Porter's novel is to be found in its adaptation to the screen, and director and cast have tactfully carried out its spirit. It is the story of how courage, health and contentment come to an invalided soldier because of his kindness to an old man and with the help of kindly and philosophic neighbors. Happiness is assured him also, the outcome of an act of unselfish sympathy. It is the kind of plot which has endeared Mrs. Porter to many readers and it is presented on the screen with restraint and good taste. Some of the nature lore so characteristic of her writings has been retained in the picture. The lovely shore of the Northern California coast line is a beautiful setting and the cast is well chosen. While children may not always follow some of the complexities of the plot they will enjoy the keeping of the bees and other sequences. It is a good family film.

In this absorbing story of the capture of a public enemy we are shown, as in "G-Men," the courage, ingenuity and tireless devotion to duty of the Federal agents. Proving conclusively that all the thrill and romance of old time gangster themes can be preserved in pictures which direct sympathy to the agents of law, this production is exceedingly good entertainment as well as a liberal education in the training and ideals of our United States Secret Service department. THE MAN WHO KNEW TOO MUCH » »

If you are to understand the cryptic threads of this plot let us warn you not to miss the opening reels. It is an exceptionally strong story in which an English couple enjoying the winter sports at St. Moritz with their young daughter, suddenly find themselves in possession of knowledge of an international plot. Before they can report their information their child is kidnapped and they are warned to keep their secret or “never see their child again.” The story is told in brief sequences which require close concentration to follow intelligently but it builds up to a climax as exciting as those in any American gangster film. The false standards, glittering luxury and supersophistication of this picture will discourage those who hoped that the manufacture of this sort of product had ceased. It has a trite plot concerning the tactics used by a society wife to end the philanderings of her play-boy husband. The tempo is fast, the lines are smart, though artificial. With lilting buoyancy and definite charm, this delightful operetta carries one through an interesting period in the colonial history of New Orleans. The vivid and romantic plot with the period and locale afford wide opportunity for picturesque settings. OIL FOR THE LAMPS OF CHINA » »

Most interesting in theme and in its foreign setting, this film is a serious indictment of a big corporation's ruthless methods in dealing with its employees. The story is developed from the point of view of an idealistic young man who devotes himself conscientiously to making his job the main factor in his life, not only for his personal advancement but because of his unquestioning loyalty to the "Company." He is sent to China for a huge oil corporation and then, though he encounters innumerable hardships and injustices, with the staunch support of an understanding wife he finally wins the coveted promotion. The author ironically leaves his public in the dark concerning the influences which were eventually responsible for seeing that justice was done, and the ending can not be interpreted as softening in the slightest degree the unfavorable light in which big business is shown. The picture is an exceptionally interesting adaptation of a popular book, the acting is unusually good, the photography is excellent, the direction smooth and telling. The production merits the attention of discriminating audiences.

In spite of its child heroine this is not an ideal story for children since it deals with the theme of the busy husband, the wife who feels neglected, and the other man who has time to relieve her boredom. However, it is fairly apparent from the start that the happy home will be saved by the child, and Shirley Temple, by obscuring the plot with her dazzling personality, successfully gives to the whole the lustre that it would otherwise lack. PUBLIC HERO NO. 1

The gangster film, with its thrilling action and adventurous plot, seems to be enjoying a successful revival now that sympathy has definitely been established in favor of the agents of the law. The excitement and suspense of a chase is usually interesting especially when the enterprise is extremely dangerous. These G-MEN films are undoubtedly supplying a public demand but we feel that action emphasizing the detective work and limiting the gun-play would be as effectively diverting. This picture concerns the capture of a gang of criminals by federal agents. It gives a candid and bold description of crime today and an equally frank description of the loyalty of Federal agents to their oath of office, of their absolute fearlessness in the line of duty and of their relentless prosecution of their purpose to rid society of the hardened criminal.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT

William Powell, Ginger Rogers, Ralph Morgan. From the novel by Arthur Somers Roche. Direction by Stephen Roberts. R.K.O.

Very much in the manner of "The Thin Man," this film has all the piquant dialogue and gay nonchalance of its predecessor and is undoubtedly entertaining. To say that it equals the earlier picture would be undue praise, for the drinking scenes which almost reached the limits of good taste have been carried many cocktails too far, and the mystery has been made of such secondary importance to the sophisticated graces of Ginger Rogers and the sybaritic accoutrements of William Powell's apartments that even the most alert mystery fan is at a momentary loss to explain whether or not Mary Smith, the star of a stage success called "Midnight," was actually kidnapped and just what murders took place and why. Anyhow Powell is a most engaging sleuth, and there is a good deal of suspense to contrast with the gaiety in this latest example of the deteeco-convivial film.

VILLAGE TALE

The value of drama of this type is always controversial. For many it will be only an unpleasant story of cruel people who do stupid and malicious things. But others will see in it unusually clever emphasis on human characterizations and plausible emotional reactions set against a country background. Both author and director have caught with realism the petty hates and spiteful tricks of the everyday, thoughtless villagers and the general atmosphere is suggestive of the Hardy novels of English rural life. The story points to the value of good breeding and a fine and strong inheritance of physical and intellectual traits and brings out the philosophy that a majority of ordinary people are always dependent upon stronger leaders for guidance although they show no gratitude in the end. The humor is not sophisticated. Many will think it coarse and the plot is slow in development because of the multitude of details introduced for atmosphere. It is not a pleasant tale. We cannot recommend it as entertainment. You may see in it what you will.

THE WANDERING JEW

There is a tremendous appeal to the imagination in the legend of the Wandering Jew, the man who cursed Jesus and was therefore condemned to wander endlessly through the ages until Christ should come to him again. Conrad Veidt brings this shadowy, legendary figure vividly before us. Seeing the forlorn Jew who is denied the solace of death, we find ourselves believing in his predicament and sympathizing with him in his yearning for release. The picture has almost no story. It is a series of incidents pointing the stages of the Jew's spiritual growth from the scoffing voluptuary going out to spit upon Jesus when he passes, to the kindly doctor tending the poor and affirming his faith before the Court of Inquisition. It is beautifully acted, intensely dramatic yet restrained and should interest intelligent audiences both for its theme and for its artistry. The lovely musical setting enhances the beauty of the production.

MOTION PICTURE REVIEWS

THE WOMEN'S UNIVERSITY CLUB
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

JULY 1935
For practical use we suggest filing bulletins where they may be easily accessible for reference. Films are not released simultaneously over the country. You will need these reviews for constant reference.

THE COLLEGE WOMAN AND THE MOTION PICTURE

Sarah McLean Mullen

"Let's do something constructive this year about the motion picture problem in our town," summarizes the feeling that resulted from the meetings on the subject of motion pictures at the recent national convention of the A.A.U.W. in Los Angeles. The article by Dr. Edgar Dale in the A.A.U.W. Journal for June provided substance for the initiation of general discussion. More detailed suggestions are welcome, however, as offering a challenge to every university graduate who has not yet found satisfactory employment for her time and energy, either as a professional or as a volunteer worker. That there is a problem in connection with pictures in our modern social life is accepted; what to do about it, is as yet to be worked out.

For the teacher in the schools, there are, of course, two types of activity of fundamental importance: class instruction in photoplay appreciation and the motion picture club. Both of these have as their basic objectives, the selection of worthwhile film entertainment, the development of a discriminating taste, as well as an increased enjoyment of good pictures. It is likely that discussion of pictures will lead to other points and the teacher as well as the students will find profitable enjoyment in the discussion of subjects near to the children's hearts.

Outside the school walls, the teacher may share other activities related to pictures, either as a mother or as a club woman. As a mother, the chief responsibility of the college woman seems to be in accustoming her family to the use of reliable film-guides such as that of the Los Angeles Branch, "Motion Picture Reviews." Next, the college woman should busy herself within her own group of friends or neighboring families in awakening a sense of the responsibility that parents should bear in connection with the motion picture entertainment of their children. This includes wise selection of pictures, substitution of other activities for film attendance, and accompanying children to the theatre to insure correct understanding or providing an often needed "adult discount" to soften the over-stimulating effect of thrills or prolonged suspense.

The wise college parent will provide an opportunity for the children to discuss the pictures viewed. This should not be mere retelling of the story, but should include some evaluation of performance and some analysis of motives and actions of characters. Such a procedure will tend to eliminate the commonly accepted custom of letting the children go to a movie, merely because “Johnny and Sue are going” or because “it is Friday night or Saturday afternoon”—as the case may be. Gradually the children in homes operating under this plan will become accustomed to going only when there is a picture that offers something truly conducive to their welfare, in clean fun, entertainment, enjoyable music, valuable vicarious experiences of travel or adventure, or vivid visualization of characters and events.

The greatest opportunity, however, lies in the activities of an organized group of an A.A.U.W. Branch, for with the backing of such an organization even a small group can accomplish a great deal.

The first step should be the study of motion pictures to determine what constitutes a good and a bad picture. There is considerable material at hand that will assist in setting up standards of evaluation. The group should put into as exact expression as possible its standards for pictures suitable for various age groups. This cannot be done, of course, without some study of child psychology, as well as of drama, music, photography, and story values. The study program of the Indianapolis Branch offers many excellent suggestions.

Now the members of the group are ready to work. They may decide to organize within their community a Better Films Council. The membership in such a Council should consist of representatives, duly chosen, from the various clubs and other organizations. If there is already a Council, it will probably be more desirable to work within it, assuming the responsibility of leadership and service as required. On the other hand, the group may decide to maintain their independence and to act as a separate unit. This is most desirable only if there are no similar organizations which could feel that their efforts are being duplicated.

It is well from the very beginning to let the public know through the press just what are the objectives of the group or Council. This may necessitate articles or talks by members who know their subject thoroughly. As a rule, there will follow many suggestions for desired assistance or endeavor.

School classes studying motion picture appreciation, churches and clubs desiring programs on the subject will be glad to present informed speakers from the A.A.U.W. group. They will welcome other aid, also, in the form of printed or written articles, study-guides, pictures, or other materials that will enliven or broaden the study. This activity can easily lead to maintaining a bulletin board service for schools, churches, and clubs as to new publications, approved advertising and publicity. Perhaps, too, the group may, in some way, provide not only an annotated bibliography, but also a number of the books on the subject most worthwhile for a lending library.

Other work follows. It may consist of serving on preview committees to determine what the forthcoming pictures will have of value for the local community. This particular phase of the work, while most attractive to members, is oftentimes least valuable, as the work has probably already been done earlier and better by others more accustomed to the work. Most branches would do better merely to support such established services as conform best to the standards previously determined upon. However, there is value in publication of film-guides and estimates signed by individuals known locally. And certainly there is a necessity for purposeful first-night viewing of various types of films not covered by the usual reports. Short subjects and newsreels, because of their timeliness, are seldom evaluated before their local appearance. College women are likely to be sentient as to propaganda, especially as regards war attitudes and political suggestions contained in these types of pictures. Much harm may be prevented by concerted action of Film Councils or A.A.U.W. groups in protesting the showing of any sort of objectionable pictures.

The local exhibitor or theatre manager is always eager to obtain support for his programs. He is equally fearful of the ill-will of a group of leaders. There is good reason for cooperation between college women and the manager. Conditions in local theatres as related to minors especially are certainly always within the scope of the group's activity. These may include physical conditions; such as sanitation, crowding, poor lighting, fire exits, etc., or lack of proper supervision of young audiences. College women should, of course, be watchful of local advertising, particularly the lures and baits used to appeal to youngsters. It is not only the lobby display and screen trailer depicting scenes unwholesome in their influence, but the more insidious lures that are to be challenged. College women certainly should take the initiative in arousing public opinion against the exploitation of children. Such offers as free dancing lessons, training for radio and stage, free film tests, and "kiddie programs"—all seem generous and altruistic to the uninformed. The college woman must show their true nature to the public.

Not all the work need be so seemingly destructive; much of it may be obviously constructive. College women may serve the whole community in obtaining better pictures in the commercial theatres. Informed as to the truth about trade practices, she cannot be argued down in her demand for a just proportion of excellent films. Sometimes it may be necessary for the workers to assume the sponsorship of worth-while pictures even to the extent of a telephone publicity campaign or selling a block of seats, but the results justify the labor. In some communities, paralleling an established custom in England, interested persons are organizing cinema-going clubs which attend in a body in support of unusual films—films that otherwise would not be shown in the local community. The publicity provided by college women may be by word of mouth only, by inserted notices in the club bulletin, or by other means, but the exhibitor will soon recognize its value and will be more ready to accept suggestions from such a group.

Should the manager or exhibitor prove recalcitrant or uncooperative, the group can do much to develop public feeling that will result in a demand for a finer type of person in his place, one who feels a responsibility to the community as well as to the theatre owner. At present, one of the chief problems connected with motion pictures lies in the ignorance and lack of vision of some exhibitors.

Occasionally where schools are equipped with proper facilities for projection, the college group may assist in obtaining and supporting a worthy film program. On the whole, however, most good can be accomplished through cooperation with the commercial theatre.

Where there are several theatres in a community, a valuable asset to a community is motion picture information service located in the library or some other accessible place. This service usually includes information on the title, producing company, director, cast, general theme of the story, classification as to type, and rating as to value for special age groups and, of course, the date, hour and place of showing. The college women's group may easily install the system, provide the data to continue its operation, and even give time to answer phone calls and letters.

As antidotes to the bite of the film bug that seems to result in motion picture obsession with some people, especially youngsters, the group may foster activities of another nature. Dr. Dale suggests Children's Theatres, offering stage plays. Another, equally valuable, is a cinema club for amateur production and showing of 16mm. films. Creative instincts once aroused lead to many activities and to a more discriminating attitude toward the commercial product. Amateur picture-making may be made to include community interests such as local history. Recording school, club, or community activities weld seemingly non-assimilable groups. The results, too, are long-lasting, for a motion picture of this kind gives pleasure and continued interest for years.

There is always an opportunity for college women to suggest to producers stories for filming. Producers delight to know of a ready-made audience. There is also some possibility—not much, it is true—of writing a scenario that may be accepted by a producer. And of an entirely different nature is the need for college women to cooperate in surveys or experiments conducted by reputable organizations on problems connected with the motion picture. And last of all, there is the necessity for these same women to work intelligently for legislation that will bring better pictures and better conditions to the home town and to the entire world.

THE ARIZONIAN
Richard Dix, Margaret Grahame, Preston Foster, Louis Calhern. Direction by Charles Vidor. R.K.O.

Human nature in the raw is shown in the early days of Arizona with the sheriff and his cohorts as desperadoes who indulge in robbery and murders for personal gain until they are supplanted by a man with sufficient courage to establish a new standard of law and order. It is melodrama perforce, with more than the usual amount of drinking and gunplay but does have a factual basis in the history of that Western state. There are fine views of desert and mountain country, especially in the opening scenes, and for those who enjoy rapid-fire Westerns, it should prove entertaining.

AWAKENING OF JIM BURKE

This story concerns the psychological relationship of a father and son of opposite dispositions. The idea is a good one leaving wide possibilities for a conflict of characters but it is clumsily exaggerated and unskilfully handled. It is a great shock to the father when he finds that he has an infant prodigy instead of an "enfant terrible." Against great odds, the boy tries to live down to his father's expectations but surprisingly enough, the father, who is a stubborn individual, lives up to the boy's.

ANNA KARENINA

The adaptation of this long and complicated novel as a narrative for the screen is a laudable accomplishment, but in an effort to retain the flavor of the original with its deliberate, leisurely tempo, the adapters have regrettably sacrificed an opportunity to present the story of Anna Karenina in a guise more suited to modern minds. Too many characters are introduced and their relative significance emphasized to the point where even the leading role is overshadowed. Many sequences, interesting in themselves, but somewhat irrelevant interrupt the progress of the plot and deflect one's interest from the central theme. Nevertheless, through the superb artistry of Garbo, this unforgettable tragedy of an unhappy woman is poignantly impressive.

ALIBI IRE

In the role of a baseball player whose habit of offering alibis gets him into all sorts of scrapes, Joe E. Brown displays his usual brand of amusing clowning. There is enough suspense and pathos in the picture to redeem it from mere idiocy. It is pleasant family entertainment.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT

While not as convincing in detail as some of the earlier Chan stories, nor as swift moving, this has most of the same elements for entertainment: good suspense, an exciting mystery to uncover and the pungent comments of the fiction-famed Chinese detective. The shadowy tombs at Luxor make a fine background for the tale which centers about the misappropriation of treasures found by archeologists in the employ of the French government.

CALM YOURSELF
Robert Young, Madge Evans, Betty Furness, Nat Pendleton. From the book by Edward Hope. Screen play by Arthur Kober. Direction by George B. Seitz. M-G-M.

A young man sees the possibilities of establishing a business to assuage woes caused by the pressure of modern life. "Calm Yourself" becomes the slogan for this new venture.
When one accepts the premise that this sort of business is a part of economic life, one accepts the other absurdities with a laugh. A youthful cast enters into the spirit of the play with zest. The picture is amusing but unimportant.

COLLEGE SCANDAL

The more sinister and grim qualities of a murder mystery are destined to be mitigated when sleuthing becomes the extra-curricula activity of a co-educational college. Following an accepted formula for mysteries, the one least likely to have committed the crime is guilty, but this does not disclose enough to lessen suspense if you are interested in an amusing, slightly melodramatic film.

ESCAPE ME NEVER
Elizabeth Bergner, Hugh Sinclair, Griffith Jones, Rosalind Fuller. From a story by Margaret Kennedy. Direction by Dr. Paul Czinner. British Film. United Artists.

Those unfamiliar with the Bohemian qualities of Margaret Kennedy's characters may possibly object to the story, with its unconventionality and moments of undeniable hokum. But no one can deny that Elizabeth Bergner by her original performance, her charm and her uniquely sensitive interpretation of the little waif, Gemma, transforms the incidents into a memorable experience. The emotions are real, the characters human in their reactions, and the philosophy so honest that one leaves the theatre feeling that one has glimpsed, not a play on celluloid, but a bit of life, insecure and heart rending, but actual.

GINGER

“Ginger” is the vehicle for the introduction to the screen in a stellar role of Jane Withers, a new and talented child actress. From the very beginning, Jane's ability is quite apparent. Her emotional shading is remarkable and the director has shown the rare good taste not to place her in any situation which is outside the range of a child's reaction. The comparison between her and Shirley Temple will be inevitable. There should be no conflict, for Jane is approximately eight years old and lacks Shirley Temple's radiant beauty. The play is a study in misguided experimental sociology. It concerns itself with the fortunes of two of the submerged tenth—a broken down Shakespearian actor and a waif of the slums. A society woman, bent upon using the waif as a laboratory for her half-baked theories, causes a somewhat tangled and poignant situation but this is finally cleared by a happy chain of circumstances and a fortunate compromise. The plot is well motivated, the dialogue, genuine and free. Contrasts are made possible by a rags to riches theme but the real vividness is the result of the aggressive qualities of Jane Withers.

HOORAY FOR LOVE

This is a good picture for a hot summer's afternoon, as it will neither arouse great enthusiasm nor elicit any serious criticism. It moves along easily with pleasing leads, light songs, some excellent tap-dancing by Bill Robinson and a lovely ballet led by Gambarelli. The story is not unusual, the launching of a musical show in spite of a dearth of funds, but it is varied by the comedy of an old trouper who finally forsakes his old life for matrimony in order to save the day.

IN OLD KENTUCKY

This is one of the gayest, most humorous pictures of the season and Will Rogers' best for a long time. It should appeal to every audience. Mr. Rogers is delicious as a race horse trainer and the other characters are well cast, Bill Robinson, the famous Negro tap dancer, giving an excellent comedy performance. The director, with a consistent story, has combined human drama and action into a well rounded production.

LILIOM

This picture, adapted from Molnar's tragic and ironic play, is well cast and elaborately produced. It tells the story of Liliom who is a barker in an amusement park. A despicable person, dishonorable, brutal and unprincipled, he makes love to a servant girl who rides in the merry-go-round, treats her abominably and finally commits suicide. He is punished by being taken to Heaven where he is forced to watch the enactment of his own story on earth. The fantastic scenes in Heaven unintentionally give the impression of burlesque, but the realism of other sequences make the picture interesting for a limited audience. It is probably too bitrily ironic to suit the taste of the average American.

LOVES OF A DICTATOR

Clive Brook is excellent in this lavish and finished production. The story is laid in the eighteenth century and tells how a peasant doctor becomes a power in Denmark, is knighted by King Christian and tries to reform the King and give his people freedom. A love intrigue between the doctor and the Queen ends in a scene reminiscent of the final act of "Elizabeth the Queen." Doubtful situations are handled with restraint but the effect is extremely sophisticated.

MAKE A MILLION

This tells the story of how a young instructor, a teacher of economics in a small college, makes a million dollars. His financial activities are the result of an attempt to retaliate when his teachings are pronounced unsound by the father of one of his pupils, and his schemes involve him in a ludicrous swindle with a gang of thieves and panhandlers as his assistants. Considered as a farcical exposure of the gullibility of the public it is mildly diverting but the same theme has been handled more entertainingly elsewhere.

MURDER IN THE FLEET

It is a matter of regret that the interesting views aboard a resplendent U. S. cruiser could not have been utilized for a more constructive story. The arrival of a secret firing device of great value is accompanied by murders and general commotion, which would leave one aghast at the insecurity of naval life in peace time, if one is sufficiently credulous to agree that such events could take place. As a mystery it rates as average. The parts of the naval officers are well taken and merit admiration, and Una Merkel with her rival swains contributes some good bits of comedy.

Later she learns that one of her customers is sending an orchid a day to the lawyer's wife, and armed with a sturdy innocence, attempts to shield the wayward lady in a divorce suit. Virtue, of course, is rewarded in the end. A gloss is spread over the rather ordinary theme by general gaiety and lightness of touch, with a good measure of amusing dialogue and an attractive cast.

This is a rollicking farce, handsomely produced, and well acted by a large cast of screen favorites. Miss Davies plays the part of a particularly green small town girl who comes to New York, works in a hotel as a chambermaid and quite by accident becomes a famous beauty. The plot is, of course, an old one and entirely obvious but it is elaborated with plenty of funny situations and many complications. There is never a slow moment in the action. The picture has all the requisites of a box-office success, including a theme song sung by Dick Powell.

PEOPLE WILL TALK
Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Leila Hyams.
Direction by Alfred Santell.  Paramount.

When a middle-aged couple try a novel scheme to patch up a quarrel between their daughter and son-in-law, they almost wreck their own marriage. With a few bright moments of really amusing satire this little domestic comedy promises better entertainment than it actually provides, for it periodically slips into the clowning type of humor usually found in comic strips and is too exaggerated to be clever. It is obviously a vehicle for the talents of Mary Boland and Charles Ruggles.

SHE

From the crimson-streaked imaginings of Rider Haggard is derived this film of perilous adventure through an ice barrier of northernmost Siberia to a realm where a youth-replenishing flame, sought for five hundred years, is guarded by the mythical She.  The illusions created by Helen Gahagan in the title role is in perfect concurrence with the spirit of the original: she is beautiful, cruel, unearthly.  The production as a whole, however, fails to maintain the atmosphere of the book, and while there are many scenes which are praiseworthy for composition and there are dances and music of barbaric splendor, certain sets are too obviously plaster and paint to satisfy, and other parts of the picture are treated with such intense realism that they are blood-curdling, and the film becomes a nightmare difficult to forget.

THE SONG OF HAPPINESS

Exquisite photography, beautiful music and remarkably chosen types characterize this Russian picture. It seems definitely planned to convince both Russian and foreign people of the benevolence of the Soviet regime for it tells of the idyllic romance of a youth who was trained in a government reform school to become a fine musician and his peasant sweetheart who also was educated by the government. The picture contains more sentiment, more beauty and more hope than is expressed in most Russian productions.

THE RAVEN

Most of the tortures of the Inquisition were inflicted because of religious zealotry but a strange psychological reason for their continuance over a period of years was the bestial satisfaction derived from the exhibitions by the spectators.  Is it possible that we, of a later period, are getting a vicarious satisfaction from the horror film?  In this picture a mentally unbalanced surgeon perfects all the instruments of torture conceived by Edgar Allan Poe, and with the assistance of a man who becomes his helpless tool, he forces weekend guests into the various torture chambers.  It is, technically, well done, but will appeal only to those who enjoy the type.

THUNDER IN THE EAST

Completely entralled by the greatness of his own country, a Japanese naval officer employs his own wife as a foil to occupy the attention of a young British official in order to obtain information of important tactics. The young wife responds to the love-making of the foreigner, and when her husband wins success in the difficult project, he finds he has sacrificed all he holds dear in life.  It is a beautiful picture, less a story than a description of feelings, a delineation of Eastern psychology with fine nuances, every situation delicately handled. Charles Boyer and Merle Oberon are amazingly true to conceptions of Japanese character. Not a production for wide popular appeal, it has much to offer to a discriminating audience.

UNKNOWN WOMAN

And now we have G-Women—in a detective farce which produces mild amusement but no particular enthusiasm. The spotty interest is maintained by a button, button, who has the button routine and when we are thoroughly satisfied that the bonds are to be recovered, no one really cares. The elaborately waved blonde, whom we eventually discover to be the federal agent, does little more than heighten the pictorial effect.

VAGABOND LADY
Robert Young, Evelyn Venable, Reginald Denny, Frank Craven. From an original screen play by Frank Butler. Direction by Sam Taylor. M-G-M.

This is the type of picture which has little reason for existence other than to be a program filler in theatres which use double billing. The mechanics are well executed, the photography, lighting and choice of backgrounds being quite good, but the plot, action and lines are farcical hodge podge, and one regrets that such excellent actors should be given such poor material with which to work.

ALICE ADAMS
Katherine Hepburn, Fred Stone, Frank Albertson, Fred MacMurray, Ann Shoemaker.
From the novel by Booth Tarkington. Adapted by Dorothy Yost, Mortimer Offner, and Jane Murfin. Directed by George Stevens. R.K.O.

In the output of films for the season we must place "Alice Adams" high in the list of notable achievements. First, because it has the advantage of being a Booth Tarkington story which gives it the advantage of having a human heart interest; secondly, because the adapters have kept this spirit admirably; and thirdly, because the cast and direction have added distinction. Katherine Hepburn has surpassed even her role of Jo in "Little Women." She is brilliant as the radiant girl who seeks happiness so eagerly against the odds which she builds up by her own mistaken judgment of values. George Stone makes the father a man who seems to have stepped from life before our eyes, as does Frank Albertson, as the elder brother. The story follows the original accurately except that a more immediate happiness for the girl seems possibly assured, and this we approve since anything else would be too tragic. Comedy and pathos are nicely associated and few scenes are as hilariously funny as the dinner episode. It is splendid entertainment, carrying at the same time a very real philosophy of life.

BONNIE SCOTLAND
Laurel and Hardy. Screen play by Frank Butler and Jeff Moffitt. Direction by James W. Horne. M-G-M.

Evidently the idea behind this production is a burlesque of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and the sequences which follow this theme are the best in an otherwise dull feature. Laurel and Hardy, unwittingly lured into a Scottish regiment, are absurdly funny in their kilts and in their adjustment to Indian warfare. But two reels could have sufficed for this. The rest of the story and action is pretty slow going.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

This is the well-known dilemma of the young man whose inheritance of a fabulous fortune is contingent upon his ability to squander a cool half million pounds in a year's time. His investment in a theatrical company makes it a simple feat to turn the production into a light musical with a fiesta at Monte Carlo as an occasion for song and dance numbers. "Brewster's Millions" suffers in comparison with American films of this nature; the singing is not noteworthy nor are the show-girls, but it offers light-hearted, nonsensical entertainment, and a story which is always good fun.

Amusing, well-acted summer entertainment in which music and original episodes are cleverly mingled to make light and pleasant fun. A Manhattan taxi driver's ambition is to become a singer. Fate offers him an opportunity for a radio tryout and then ironically throws obstacles in his path. Dick Powell is a likable hero and Louise Fazenda, patroness of the cheese house, very funny. Menjou gives an interesting portrayal of a role new to him. The Flagenheim cheese theme song is an hilarious touch.

CALL OF THE WILD

An outdoor adventure story with Clark Gable's and Jack London's names combined cannot fail to attract attention. This one is straightforward and exciting with the atmosphere of rowdiness and crudity and lack of scruples which the hardships of the North made inevitable, but it is not exceptional. The original was a story of a dog. In this, the human element takes precedence. Two prospectors with but one code, "The survival of the fittest," go out to steal a claim. The dog is the cause of the bitter enmity of a dangerous rival and helps him to a grub-stake. When the wild calls, he departs. A love element is tactfully handled. Both Miss Young and Mr. Gable are adequate, but Jack Oakie as the irrepressible jail-bird, and Reginald Owen as the evil Smith are vividly stimulating in their roles. The outdoor scenery is beautiful and the picture is good for a family audience, but too strenuous for younger children.

BRIGHT LIGHTS

While adults may vary in their taste for this kind of entertainment, this is undoubtedly good fun and very well done. With a large cast, capably selected, and with the earmarks of an old time burlesque and vaudeville combined with the glamor of modern Follies, Joe E. Brown excels in the role of entertainer and comedian. The story opens with a show leaving for a tour of small towns. A society girl joins the troupe and with Joe's help becomes a hit, and the two make the larger circuit, the "Bright Lights" of the cities. The story has some romantic complications, but the interest is sustained by the singing, dancing, humor and excellent miming of the star.

CURLY TOP

Here is a delightful modernized version of "Daddy Long Legs" in which two orphaned girls are adopted by the rich bachelor and Shirley plays the role of younger sister. She is an enchanting "Curly Top," full of charm and laughter, childish and adorable. The story has the perennial appeal of Cinderella. Songs and dancing are interpolated naturally and entertainingly. The humor is spontaneous, the settings luxurious and beautiful of course and the cast is well chosen. It will delight youngsters and will have wide appeal generally because it revolves around the little girl and because it is wholesome and pleasantly sentimental.

CHAMPAGNE FOR BREAKFAST

This is a shallow and pointless story dressed up with smart talk and scenes of fashionable restaurants. It concerns the doings of two spoiled daughters of an erstwhile rich man, when they are left penniless after their father's suicide. Just as they are about to become the victims of a swindler, a nice young man rescues them. The title is derived from the fact that the girls drink champagne for breakfast because they

DEALERS IN DEATH

Monroe Shaff, assisted by Burnet Hershey.

This picture is purely anti-war propaganda. It exposes the "munitions racket" and shows the probable cost of a future war in dollars and lives and a wholesale destruction of cities. In a series of stills and motion pictures, accompanied by a monologue of comment, it shows the devastating effects of the new inventions which would undoubtedly be used in another war. The commentator states that in order to sell their wares, the munitions manufacturers start wars through newspaper propaganda in many countries and prolong wars by supporting the weak side when it is about to surrender. The facts and figures presented in support of these statements seem authentic. The picture is a challenge to all thinking people to inform themselves on the subject.

DANTE’S INFERNO

"Heaven or Hell on Earth is of each man's making." The moral is too obvious in this modernized version of Dante's Inferno, creditably but not exceptionally presented. It tells the story of the rise of Jim Carter from stevedore to concession magnate. Because he gains material success by unethical methods, his path inevitably leads to ruin and despair. The scenes from the original book are well photographed and are very effective, but the picture is sensational in treatment and is neither pleasant nor constructive entertainment.

DIAMOND JIM

Edward Arnold, Jean Arthur, Binnie Barnes, Cesar Romero. From the novel by Parker Morell, adapted by Harry Clark and Doris Malloy. Direction by Edward Sutherland. Universal.

The story concerns the rise of Diamond Jim Brady from a poor Irish station-master's assistant to a rich and spectacular super-salesman of railroad equipment. He also made a name for himself as a gourmand, a backer of Lillian Russell's shows and as a market plunger. The life of this fascinating figure in our country's development is an ideal subject for a picture. The man's greatness of heart, of appetite and of purse make him an original character, and because of the story and the casting of Edward Arnold as Jim Brady, the picture is fresh and of extraordinary interest. The necessary lapses of time are so skillfully bridged that the continuity is not impaired. The post-Civil War development and the elegance of the times, combined with its lack of taste are well shown. Because taste in direction and script are notable, the general effect is entirely wholesome without losing the historical value of the life of this colorful personality, or of the period in which he lived.

What happens when a mother, once a famous actress, runs a boarding-house for theatrical folk but keeps her daughter in perfect ignorance of her past and present calling until the young girl comes home from a fashionable school? Does she marry her rich young man or go on the stage? You guess. Marjorie Rambeau's part as the mother rings very true in this picture, which is not especially original in treatment but has humor, some lively scenes and a dash of pathos to make it fairly entertaining.

ESCAPADE

Sophisticated Vienna forms a background for this delightful comedy. It concerns a philandering artist who attempts to save the reputations of two of his loves. In extricating himself and the two discarded sophisticates and in placating their distinguished husbands, he unwittingly involves a charming young woman and falls in love with her. By her personality and art, Luise Ranier dominates the picture, to some extent, subordinating the others of the cast. The picture is most entertaining. To add to its general excellence, the dialogue is clever and unusual.

\[\text{THE FARMER TAKES A WIFE} \]

This is an interesting and sympathetic treatment of a seldom depicted era in American history, when transportation by water was at its height, but soon to be replaced by faster transit on land. It is a picturesque presentation of characters, costumes and customs of early days on the Erie Canal, telling the story of a girl who loves the canal so devotedly that it is difficult for her to understand the ambition of the man she loves who wishes to become a farmer. There is humor, splendidly introduced by Slim Summerville, some lovely photography, and pleasing musical interludes. But had the story been directed so that the conflict could always have been between the man's temperamental love of the land, and the woman's inherent love of the canal, against the background of their emotional love for each other, it would have been magnificent drama. It now builds up to a mere physical conflict between two men and hence loses dramatic force. As it stands it is an entertaining pageant, skilfully individualized, but falling far short of being great.

A typical newspaper story, with very little novelty in the plot, which concerns the rivalry between a man and a woman reporter on different newspaper staffs. An industrial drama, the scenes of which are laid in a construction camp where a tunnel is being bored through a mountain. The motive of the plot is a long-established feud between two “pit-bosses,” rivals in the efficiency of their crews, in their skill in fighting and in love. Hergesheimer’s novel should have furnished enough material for a stirring motion picture. The old ship owner and his two sons, one a scoundrel and a “land-lubber,” the other venturesome and a born sailor, are colorful characters. Opium smuggling, family feuds, and the tragedy of the Chinese wife brought home by the sailor’s son, offer great possibilities for drama. Nevertheless the picture disappointingly lacks vitality and is stagey and antiquated in technique. The quaint costumes and settings of the times, the salty vernacular of the old seaman and the oriental beauty of Anna May Wong are all that it has to offer.

Certain incidents have been changed and others added in the adaptation of “Jalna” for the screen, but the picture is a surprisingly good reflection of the book. Seeing it is like suddenly being ushered into a room and introduced to a group of people formerly known only by reputation. Old Gran, dominating matriarch of the clan, the uncles, the heterogeneous brothers and their alien wives, Meg the sentimental victim of a deferred love affair, these, sometimes lovable sometimes hateful but always vital and human with their conflicting interests and family loyalty, enact their parts in a colorful chapter from the history of the Whiteoaks. As in the book the credibility of the story depends upon the character of Gran. Jessie Ralph ably represents this amazing old lady on the screen and sets the pace for the other actors who will not disappoint those who enjoyed the book.

LITTLE BIG SHOT

Another crook melodrama is chosen to introduce a child actress who has charm and ability and who deserves a background better than a portrayal of shiftlessness and crime. Sybil Jason is talented and is the only bright spot in an otherwise banal picture. An orphaned child is brought up by two worthless fellows who are on the outer ring of criminal activities. They finally reform and all go to the country to live happily ever after. The sentiment is cheaply insincere and the cast struggles futilely to make it passably entertaining.

With money and an assumed title, a former railroad cook exposes the weaknesses of a family of social climbers. The picture is ideal hot-weather entertainment for it is entirely lacking in depth and in no way taxes the mentality. It is another version of the Cinderella theme. Its aim is amusement, and it does maintain a pleasing lightness of tempo. The comedy sequences are wholesome and humorous, with little sublety but some satiric thrusts at smug social snobs. LOVE ME FOREVER

It is an ambitious program to offer motion picture patrons the amount of grand opera which is sung in this film, but they will take it and like it because of Grace Moore's glorious voice, perfectly recorded, and a vital though somewhat incredible story of the love of an Italian café owner of humble origin who holds music so high that, when he finds it personified in a woman, he becomes her slave and conversely her greatest benefactor. The opera scenes are well staged, orchestral accompaniments very good, and there is enough real humor and depth of feeling to balance the entertainment with the aesthetic values.

Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans, David Holt. Direction by Ralph Murphy. Paramount.

This is another film eulogizing the courage of the G-Men and is to be commended because like its predecessors it "stars" the defenders instead of the violators of the law. Here the problem involved is the detection of a group of criminals through the tracing of stolen currency. Step by step the work of investigation is carried on, logically and effi-violent as some of the G-Men stories, but many of the situations are gripping, and it gives a good understanding of the excellent

There is little excuse for this type of picture beyond its appeal for those who have a jaded appetite for life and find satisfaction only in raw horrors. The unhappy feature is that many young people are fascinated by such themes and can not fail to be subjected to intense nervous strain, while others become hardened to the depiction of cruelty. The material as such is well handled, the lighting unusually good, the acting realistic and the mood well sustained. Even in a frankly im-to stipulate that the brain-power could be transferred with the grafting of a pair of hands tion by Herbert Wilcox. British Dominion.

United Artists Release.
This cannot be classed as an historical film since it in no way attempts to follow the facts of history but presents the famed liason of the orange vendor and her royal lover as merely an innocent friendship. The picture is made up of a series of incidents with no dramatic continuity, outlining in a sketchy way the life of Nell Gwynn from the time that Charles II first saw her at the Drury Lane Theatre until her death. The settings and costumes are charming. Anna Neagle is perfect in the title role, seeming to possess all the unquenchable spirits, the naturalness and the vulgarity of the real Nell. However, in glossing over the truth, the dramatic essence of Nell's life story is lost. Although the present version may have been severely cut for American audiences, the theme could have been expertly handled from the beginning so that the story might have retained both historical accuracy and dramatic force without offending public taste.

A trivial story serves as a framework on which to hang various musical and dancing numbers. The plot is silly, a student intrigued as usual by a mercenary co-ed, is saved from a mesalliance through the efforts of his father and friends, and the college background is done after the traditional manner of un-reality thought necessary by studios. Although the musical numbers seem long, the jazz is tuneful, the dancing restrained and entertaining, and the choral arrangements are good. The photography likewise deserves praise. There are many lovely and unusual shots. But the general estimate is that a good deal of technical excellence is wasted on a picture which, largely because of its story, is only trivial entertainment.

THE RETURN OF PETER GRIMM

The adaptation of this famous and beautiful stage play for the screen is a dismal disappointment. It is wordy and slow, and the story is interpreted more as comedy than as drama with a deeper meaning. Mr. Barrymore acts in too light a vein, and the rest of the cast, with the exception of Edward Ellis (as the Doctor) are not sufficiently good to carry the weight of the play. The younger generation may not recall David Warfield's Peter Grimm, a grand old man whose spirit returns to earth after death to clear up the unhappiness he had unintentionally caused. Possibly he made the character too much his own for those who loved the play as David Belasco presented it, to accept another in the role, but there was a rare spiritual suggestion in the play which the screen production seems to have missed.

SMART GIRL

"Smart Girl" is a picture without pretense to importance, which unexpectedly manages to become very good fun. The story of two sisters in love with one man and the companion plot of an innocent employee involved in an oil swindle, are given sufficient embellishments to keep them from becoming tiresome. Ida Lupino is like a breath of April with showers and sunshine, and Joseph Cawthorne has never been so funny since the old theatre days; his misuse of the English language, often a clumsy form of humor, is so naive that he is quite irresistible. A danger in Pollyanna pictures is that they reflect a state of mind which is responsible for many of the world’s ills. Although it is possible for occasional gangsters to reform, it seems in doubtful taste to base a story on the nobility of men of this class who yearn to give boys the chance they never had. The hero is imported from Albany to act as bodyguard for a notorious night club owner. He becomes boxing instructor at a settlement house. The night club owner finances summer outings until he becomes jealous of the other’s attentions to a girl teacher in the neighborhood. A melodramatic fight between the two ends in their mutual respect for each other. It is full of the “hokum,” all too common in motion pictures, which weakens audience ability to appreciate real dramatic excellence. It is the philosophy of the plot, not the production values to which we object. It is told with restraint, is well cast, and the pace is sufficiently fast to hold interest.

Although the Eurasian is a creature beyond the pale in the viewpoint of residents of Shanghai, it is difficult for an American to be stirred to the marrow of his bones by the problem of a fair New Yorker who wishes to marry the issue of a Russian general and a Manchu princess. The producers must have had some qualms about the reception by the public, inasmuch as there are two definite points at which the drama might be terminated. There is a good deal of atmosphere: shadowy streets, rich and languorous apartments of modern China, smoke-wreathed Russian restaurants; Loretta Young is often lovely to behold, and Charles Boyer’s characterization is interesting if not entirely “sympathetic”; but there are needlessly extravagant gestures to the story, and it is all too far removed from the average life to have any deep effect.

Noel Coward, Julie Hayden, Hope Williams, Martha Sleeper. Written and directed by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. Paramount.

This picture is of unusual interest for adult audiences. A combination of sophisticated realism and supernatural fantasy, it is a stimulating experiment, significant in its maturity and its expertness of production. It pictures the character of a scoundrel in every sense of the word, a clever sophisticate, intellectually brilliant, but selfish and mean in his relations to every one with whom he comes in contact. He attracts women, only to cast them off at the slightest whim; he has no conscience or decency in relation to anyone. He has neither the respect nor the liking of his associates. At his untimely death his soul returns to earth because of a legend that it will be subjected to unceasing wandering unless one person weeps for him. The production is of such excellence that the question arises, why is it not entirely artistic? Possibly the break from adroit realism to fantasy is too sudden, or the act which redeems him is not sufficiently sympathetic to the audience. It is, however, one of the most interesting pictures of the year and not to be missed by those looking for the unusual in film entertainment.

TWO GUN MICKEY. Walt Disney. United Artists. Mickey rescues Minnie from outlaws. Some amusing touches and much gun play.

MICKEY'S MAN FRIDAY. Walt Disney. United Artists. An ingenious, imaginative cartoon in which Mickey and his man Friday rout cannibals. Very entertaining, all ages.

MICKEY'S KANGAROO. Walt Disney. United Artists. A gift of a kangaroo furnishes exciting times for both Mickey and Pluto. Very amusing for all.

THE BAND CONCERT (in color). Walt Disney. United Artists. Mickey as bandmaster leads the animals in a riot of action, color, and sound. It is exceptionally well done and one is conscious of the fine musical interpretation throughout. Excellent for all.

WHO KILLED COCK ROBIN? Silly Symphony in color. United Artists. A brilliant burlesque in which Jennie Wren impersonates Mae West. It is witty and highly entertaining but the human suggestion is a questionable departure in our minds for Walt Disney's art. Adults.

KIDS IN THE SHOE. Color Classic. Paramount. The nursery tale of the old woman who lived in a shoe and her efforts with her children. Fair for family.

INDIANAPOLIS 500-MILE RACE. Principal Pictures. Races give remarkable sense of speed and daring. Family.

LIFE'S LAST LAUGH No. 6, Columbia. This is another of the series of epitaphs; the New Englanders recited the faults of the deceased, and the English laugh at death. Good. Adults.

ROUMANIA. Vagabond, R.K.O. Fine scenes of countryside and cities in beautiful Roumania with interesting descriptions. Excellent for all ages.

NITE AT BILTMORE BOWL. Jimmy Grier, R.K.O. Merry-makers at the popular Los Angeles ballroom, including some motion picture actors. Has no objectionable details. All right for family.

LITTLE SOAP AND WATER. Boop, Paramount. Betty pursues Puggie, her dog, all over the house, captures him and gives him a bath. Amusing. Family.

MARCH OF TIME. F.D. The subjects covered are: Washington characters of note, life in various parts of Soviet Russia, and thrilling pictures of naval maneuvers in the Pacific. The Russian scenes are especially well photographed and are very instructive. Excellent for all ages.

WATER BABIES. Silly Symphony, United Artists. Exquisite color pictures of a day of the water babies from the time the lily buds unfold, revealing an adorable figure in the heart of each flower, to the hour when each one creeps back into the sheltering petals. A joy to behold. For all ages.

DUMBELL LETTERS No. 19, R.K.O. Really humorous letters written in all gravity. Family.

GOLDEN BOXING TOURNAMENT. Ind. An amateur contest sponsored by the Chicago Tribune, most of the participants being colored boys. All right for men and boys but little interest for a feminine audience of any age.

MOVING MELODIES. Pepperpot. Vitaphone. On moving day J. Fred Coots sings all the songs he comes across and is charged double time by the movers. Good for family.

MY GREEN FEDORA. Color Merry. Vitaphone. Peter Rabbit is left to mind Elmer, which he neglects to do. Elmer is missing; Peter dons a green Fedora, and after many adventures, rescues his brother. Good for family and children.

COOKIE CARNIVAL. Silly Symphony. United Artists. The glories of fancy cooking from rum cookies to an upside-down cake are revealed in this lovely cartoon in soft pastel shades. The various sweets assume fanciful forms and go through clever performances. Excellent for all.

MARCH OF TIME No. 3. F.D. Propaganda for peace with unquestionably real pictures; Mexico's religious troubles, Huey Long with views of New Orlean and other parts of Louisiana; Trans-Pacific air express to China. Excellent. Adults.

BROADWAY HIGHLIGHTS No. 2. Variety, Paramount. Ted Husing tells about various bright spots in New York, as the pictures are shown. Good. Family.

TWO LITTLE LAMBS. Oswald. Universal. Oswald's difficulties with an air circus. Amusing for family.

PUPPET MURDER CASE. Scrappy, Columbia. Scrappy's complications with a puppet show. Fair for family.

LANGUAGE ALL MY OWN. Boop. Paramount. Betty goes to Japan where she finds her "boopy-doop" language is understood even in the Orient. Good. Family.

WATER THRILLS. Sport. Columbia. Excellent pictures of Mississippi steamboats, the Vanderbilt cup race, chug boats, star boats, etc. Fine for family and children matinees.

COUNTRY MOUSE. Merrie Melodie. Vitaphone. A mouse aspires to be a boxing champion, but when his mother interferes, he returns home safely. Good for family.

ONLY THE BRAVE. Ernest Truex. A painfully banal play with Truex and Mary Jane Barrett.

FOR BETTER OR WORSE. Popeye. Paramount. Popeye tired of the life of a bachelor, seeks a wife from a matrimonial agency. He flees from the ceremony, content to endure his own bad cooking. All right for family.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE. Chase. M.G.M. Elated at thoughts of seeing their ancestral home, a prominent citizen of Kentucky and his wife set out together, only to find it a domicile of hill-billy class. Amusing for family.

OLD MOTHER HUBBARD. Republic. Color cartoon of interest to family.

PRINCE, KING OF DOGS. M.G.M. Pete Smith shows tricks of remarkably intelligent dog. Very good. Family and children.

NATURE SPEAKS. Paramount. Beautiful photographic shots and accompanying poetry. Family.

MICKEY'S GARDEN. United Artists. Disney color cartoon with the usual excellence of technique making it outstanding among other products. Mickey in a garden learns the destructive power of insects. Very charming in idea and amusing as well. Excellent family and children's matinees.

STAR BOARDER. M.G.M. Charlie Chase comedy in which he plays boarder in his own home to avert "Auntie's" wrath over her niece's marriage. A matter of taste for adults.

GROOMS IN GLOOM. Tom Howard. Fox. Silly farce of man helping another to marry.

STUFFY'S ERRAND OF MERCY. Pepperpot. Vitaphone. Poorly executed cartoon of a child's desire which is gratified.

BROADWAY HIGHLIGHTS. Paramount. Ted Husing introduces Paul Whiteman, Earl Carrol, Sophie Tucker, the Music Box, Radio City with Al Jolson rehearsal for N.B.C. Good. Family.

WILL ROGERS

Will Rogers' passing has brought universal sadness to people in all walks of life. The beauty of his character, the kindliness of his wit and humor, and the constructive nature of his daily comments on world events, made him a dynamic force for good which the world greatly needed at this time.

And quite apart from his written word, the world needed him in pictures. He never claimed to be an actor. He was only himself in any role he played. Perhaps because of this he was the more important on the screen. Others can create roles which are absolutely dissimilar to themselves. Many actors and actresses are known for characters they have created. Their own personalities are so submerged in their creative art that at times they rebel believing that their true individualities have been lost to their public. But Will Rogers could only be himself. Whether he was Captain of a Mississippi River boat, stock raiser on a Mid-West farm, or lazy drifter of "Jubilo" fame, his cheerful grin, his gracious sympathy, and heart warming philosophy sent out an aroma of helpful influence which his audiences felt and which cannot be measured.

Exhibitors say that his pictures were their greatest money-makers. Surely this means something very important to the industry. Only once that we remember was a film in which he played ever censured. "State Fair" had one scene which offended his followers. He did not play in it. I question that he knew it was in the script. They say he never read scripts. He was told what the story was, what was required of him, and given a suggestion of his lines and then he went to work. When "State Fair" was released he was deluged with protests from individuals and committees interested in "Better Films." I do not know what he replied, but I feel sure that he would regret any violation of taste in his productions whether he had any responsibility or not. It never occurred again. People went to see Will Rogers. His audiences felt that they knew him personally, because, whatever the setting, his individuality and homely kindliness reached out to them.

We believe that one of the finest memorials the industry could offer in his memory would be a yearly series of pictures of the type in which Will Rogers would have liked to appear. The movie public will miss him sadly, and it will miss his contribution of unsophisticated, wholesome, entertaining "Better Films," always starred for family enjoyment.

Laura Osman Vruwink.
If you have children at home, or if you know any children in whom you are interested, you must at some time have been concerned with the problem of motion pictures in relation to children. Some of you have taken the little of least resistance and have allowed your children to go to anything and everything as often as they like. Some of you who have young children are beginning to wonder what policy to adopt when the movie craze arrives. What is the right course? We don't want to be too old fashioned, nor do we want our children to be harmed mentally or physically. How can we regulate their choice of pictures and determine how frequently it is safe to let them go?

In the first place we must know a good deal of child and adolescent psychology in general and our own children's mental and nervous makeup in particular. What is good for one child is bad for another, but there are well known principles governing the emotional development of children. Though he may comprehend certain emotions, a child may be greatly harmed by being exposed to problems that are too mature. This is not theory, but has been proven over and over again by experience. A child's happiness depends upon his feeling of security, his belief that the world is fundamentally good. If you take this away from him in childhood, he may never be able to adjust himself to the later demands of life.

Another essential is to know pictures. You can not influence your child in his choice without first hand knowledge of the movies that are being advertised. If you never go to the movies yourself, your child will not value your opinion. Do you know what ideals are presented, what class of people are portrayed, what example of conduct is held up for your child in the average movie? Children learn largely from example. What is your child learning of ethics, of conventions, of ambitions? Naturally you can not see all the pictures, but there are many reliable guides available. By calling the Los Angeles Public Library you may have read to you the reviews of a number of organizations, whose judgment you may safely follow. People who use this information find that they are spared the disappointment of going to poor and uninteresting films, and children soon begin to prefer entertainment that is really appropriate for their age.

If your children have not yet acquired the movie habit do not make the mistake of allowing them to begin regular weekly attendance. If they expect to go every Friday night or every Saturday afternoon to the neighborhood theatre, you will have a much harder problem on your hands. There are not enough good movies made to make it possible to find a suitable picture every week-end at your neighborhood theatre. You will discover that some local theatre managers will try all kinds of schemes to get the children to attend regularly: serials, clubs, prizes, etc. The sooner your children understand that they may not expect to go regularly the easier it will be for you to control their attendance.

And what about your children's health? You probably give your babies sun baths and regular naps and see that the older children play in the open air every day. Does it appear logical to allow them to sit from noon until dinner time in a dark theatre in seats that are not made for their comfort, straining their eyes and craning their necks, while they watch two feature length films, a comedy, a cartoon, and a chapter from a serial. The school day is carefully planned in order that no child shall have to concentrate for any great length of time on any one task. It is interrupted by singing, games and change of occupation, because teachers trained to work with children know that a child becomes nervous if kept too long at one kind of work. Parents would undoubtedly complain if their children came home from school exhausted by over-work. But any child who sits through a double feature is overworked. He either exhausts his nerves keeping still or begins running up and down the aisles. Have you patronized a children's matinee? Do you believe that the undisciplined behavior of overtired children is good for them? The double bill is one of the major obstacles in the path of good family entertainment. The better pictures are frequently booked with poor ones, made solely to provide a program filler. It is practically impossible to get children out of the theatre before a second feature, even when theatre managers announce the end of the children's part of the program. But a refusal to allow your child to attend a double feature would go a long way toward voicing public opinion, and after all it is public opinion that eventually rules. Or if you make a point of calling the theatre, finding out at what hour the picture you want to see is going on, and staying only for that film you will be helping to register your plea for single billing.

It is more difficult to deal with older children who naturally want to see every movie that is being widely advertised and discussed, but if you try to develop their critical faculties and encourage them to read movie guides, not paid advertising blurbs, but sound honest criticism, they will soon learn that trash is less satisfactory than a really first class motion picture. Taste can be educated in this matter, as well as in literature or food or behavior. Probably no one who reads this would deliberately feed a child bad food, but laziness or indifference has led us to close our eyes to the fact that indiscriminate movie attendance is bad mental food. Children love beauty, they are hero worshippers, they like stories of bravery and honor. It is very nearly criminal to allow them to saturate their minds with sordid problems, crime, abnormalities and warped ethics. But this is what you will be doing to them if you are not careful.

Cooperate with the school teachers in their endeavor to guide your children in their choice of entertainment. Interest yourself in neighborhood projects that provide alternatives for the movies. Cooperate also with the parents of your children's friends in supporting playground activities, neighborhood gatherings and other normal wholesome forms of recreation. How often we hear the plea, "But Mother, Willie's mother lets him go every Saturday." If you talk to Willie's mother you may find that she is just as anxious as you are to discourage the weekly movie habit. Get acquainted with the local theatre manager and give him your support when he books good family films. If a good picture comes along, make an effort to take your children, go with them, talk about it afterwards at home and you will find it a source of enjoyment to the whole family. Your child will be benefited by your point of view, and your interpretation of parts of the picture he may not have understood. Help in awakening public opinion against bad pictures. Talk the matter over with friends and neighbors, and when you do go to the movies, know what you are going to see and patronize only the good films.

Sylvia Sidney, Herbert Marshall, Phillips Reed. From the play by Claude Binyon.
Direction by Wesley Ruggles. Paramount.

This is the story of a December and May romance between a playwright and his young secretary. The same situation exists in a play the man has written, and the contrast between the writer's preconceived theories and his own experience is cleverly presented. The film play follows the original stage production almost exactly except that it seems more wordy and that an interlude only verbally recounted on the stage is given in most amusing detail on the screen. It is witty, sophisticated entertainment.

A combination of musical comedy and social drama-with-a-purpose which do not mix well. The blame falls on the story but direction does not help. It concerns a boy unjustly sent to prison, who rather unwillingly runs away and is later apprehended by the accident of meeting a former associate who reports him.

ALIAS BULLDOG DRUMMOND » »
Jack Hulbert, Claude Hulbert, Fay Wray.
Direction by Walter Forde. Gaumont-British.

Unless American audiences wish their detective stories unadulterated melodrama, this burlesque should please. It is the experiences of a novice detective, impersonating the famous Bulldog Drummond, who tries to solve a mystery about which he knows nothing, by methods of which he is totally ignorant. Absurdity is the key-note, with everything sacrificed to comedy adventure. Though the humor is British, it is often subtle and very amusing. The story is clever with well sustained suspense and unexpected episodes, but it is so farcically handled that it seems a bit overdone.

ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL » »
Sir Guy Standing, Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell, Rosalind Keith, John Howard.
Direction by Alexander Hall. Paramount Picture.

This is not the usual frivolous campus picture, but a beautiful and inspiring story of idealism. The opening scenes abound in humor when the "plebes" arriving at the Naval Academy are subjected to a mild but most amusing form of hazing that quickly reveals their distinguishing characteristics.
One "plebe," "Click" Haley, has come there determined to take whatever benefits the Academy has to offer and to give nothing in return, relying on his wits, his prowess at football and an engaging personality to carry him through the four years. In contrast to "Click" is Commodore Fitzbaugh who, though retired, devotes his life to watching over the cradle of the Navy. Like Mr. Chips, the English schoolmaster of a current best seller, Commodore Fitzbaugh hovers about, fearful lest the new generation of midshipmen fail to love and appreciate navy traditions as they should. Sir Guy Standing in this role paints a portrait that will not easily be forgotten. His final act of devotion to his beloved cause makes a satisfying though tragic end to a picture that is outstanding for its good taste, its excellent cast, its well constructed story and its sincerity.

ATLANTIC ADVENTURE
Nancy Carroll, Lloyd Nolan, Harry Langdon.

Audiences looking for light entertainment will enjoy this fast moving newspaper story of a reporter who temporarily loses his job and his sweetheart and regains both after a series of exciting adventures with a gang of crooks on shipboard. The idea is not a new one but it is amusingly presented, and though murder enters into the plot, the obviously humorous interest of the picture makes it entirely innocuous.

THE BLACK ROOM

A fantastic, morbid tale of a madman, unbalanced by fear and superstition, this film, strangely enough, has elements of beauty. In contrast to the evil character who dominates the story there are others who are brave and fine. The setting is a feudal castle in the Swiss Alps. The grandeur of the surrounding country and the medieval costumes of the peasantry make a background rich in beauty and interest. However, a mad murderer and his hideous crimes are not usually considered entertaining subjects. No matter how artistically presented they may be, they still leave a most disturbing memory.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936

M-G-M's Broadway Melody, like its predecessor, has all the elements of good musical comedy entertainment. In this, a cast new for the most part to motion picture patrons, is made up of very clever artists in different specialties. The story, while not particularly original, is amusing and human, the dancing exceptionally artistic, the music tuneful and catchy. The humor is often spontaneously funny, especially when Buddy Essen is on the screen or Robert Wilkaback gives his vaudeville routine to the great enjoyment of the audience. The back-stage business in the production of an extravaganza gives opportunity for spectacular effects which are very entertaining and one ballet featuring Eleanor Powell with the Albertina Rasch Dancers is particularly beautiful. Eleanor Powell is a delightful star. She is natural and handsome, with a personality which pleases at once. Her effortless dancing will no doubt be compared with Fred Astaire's in most complimentary terms. The production is smartly entertaining.

CHINA SEAS

Action and thrills, striking photography and the glitter of the well-known team of Gable and Harlow only partly obscure the sordidness of this tale of white men's deterioration in the fetid moral atmosphere of the Orient. It is not sufficiently adroit in its handling to make its coarseness and brutality even slightly palatable.

THE CRUSADES

The story concerns the Third Crusade of the kings of Europe to win back the Holy Land from the Saracens. Richard Coeur-de-Lion, King of England, learns humility and finds love through the years of bitter struggle. The historical background furnishes opportunity for great pageantry; the beloved romantic character of Richard gives warm human interest, and the general spirit of history though not the actual facts, has been well preserved. There is a good deal of cruelty and violence of war shown, but for school children the lack of modernity should lend enough unreality to prevent its becoming objectionable, and a plea for universal peace underlies its portrayal. Henry Wilcoxon as Richard is very fine, a combination of roughness and tenderness which creates a fairly accurate picture of this fascinating hero. Dialogue keeps the spirit of the times and yet is intelligible to modern audiences. The spectacular effects are extraordinarily good and the infinite details of the production represent the most careful and painstaking research. Costumes, customs, implements of warfare, harnesses give the impression of the period as no books possibly can. While a few may object to Mr. De Mille's characteristic theatrical approach, no one can deny that this picture makes history real and entertaining.

LA DAME AUX CAMELIAS

(YCAMILLE)

In this French version of Dumas' immortal love story of Armand and Marguerite, the Lady of the Camellias, emphasis is shifted somewhat to the lighter episodes, and it is not so heavy tragedy and overweighted with sentimental scenes as was the Camille of Sara Bernhardt fame. Yvonne Printemps is charming in her simplicity. Though the English titles are inaccurate, the quality of the acting is such that titles are practically unnecessary.

THE DARK ANGEL

The charm of this romance of the Great War is as compelling as when it was first produced in silent films with Ronald Coleman and Vilma Banky in the cast. It has dignity and sincerity and the poignant tragic appeal of an enduring love for which no sacrifice is too great. Two brothers are called to the British colors. In the line of attack one is missing. He has been blinded, captured and interned in a German camp. The girl he loves believes him killed. He is unwilling to return to her because of his affliction. The story of what he makes of his life, of her own adjustment and their final happiness make a moving study of human relationships. The cast is distinguished. Miss Oberon is charming and natural and far removed from the exotic characters which we have seen her assume in other plays. Fredric March and Herbert Marshall give sympathetically fine performances. A number of children in the cast are excellent, especially a little girl (Pay Chaldecott) whose naturalness and sweetness make a marked impression. It is a production which should hold general interest.

DRESSED TO THRILL

"Dressed to Thrill" introduces us to Turra Rolf, a delightful comedienne with a charming voice. Clive Brook is rather miscast as a bon vivant, too mature and serious to be entirely romantic in the role. It is a sophisticated comedy with a thin and incredible plot, and one must stretch the imagination to believe that clothes alone can completely hide the identity of the girl in the case. An American soldier in Paris, pledged to marry a little French girl, is ordered home on Armistice Day. No word is sent Colette, and with no explanation of this breach of ethics, we find him, years later, a banker in Paris engaged to another girl. Colette, now posing as Nadia, a Russian actress, sets out to confuse her erstwhile lover and is so successful that he is torn between his love for the actress and his memory of the little Colette. Needless to say, his new fiancée is left waiting at the church.
Miss Rolf carries the picture capably and joyously by her beauty, grace, voice and acting. It is a light and frothy comedy with a distinctly Continental flavor tactfully handled.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT

This pleasant little comedy pictures the rise to fame of a radio orchestra and the three "Suwanee Sisters." THE GAY DECEPTION

Here is a perfectly charming, utterly impossible fantasy—a musical comedy type of story where no one sings but which has a musical score that cleverly adds atmosphere in a delightful way. This accompaniment is noteworthy. The plot portrays a stenographer who unexpectedly wins $5000. She spends it in regal fashion trying to have a grand time. Her greatest nemesis is a bell hop in the Waldorf-Astoria who, to her increasing annoyance, insists on trying to take care of her. The disclosure of his identity provides the most amusing and romantic dénouement. It is light, gay and full of laughs, and the charm of Francis Lederer, supported delightfully by Frances Dee and an able cast, furnishes an exceptionally pleasant hour for anyone looking for unsophisticated entertainment.

A very amazing musical comedy with lovely music and genuine humor. It relates the struggles of three young men, an actor, a composer and a stage manager, to get a producer to consider a play they have written, burlesquing Napoleon. HERE COMES THE BAND

Ted Lewis and his band are featured in this musical comedy made up of a series of incidents concerning the difficulties of a song writer whose chef-d'ouvre is stolen by a publisher. It is not very different from other productions of its type except in its finale when hillbillies, cowboys, negroes and Indians arrive via taxicab and airplane to assist their one time buddy to wrest large damages from the theiving publisher. HERE'S TO ROMANCE

Public response to recent films introducing operatic music has encouraged the production of another giving us the pleasure of hearing the beautiful voice of the Metropolitan star, Nino Martini in several arias superbly sung. The story is a gay one of a young tenor who is financed by a wealthy society woman to offset her husband's habit of playing patron of the arts to aspiring young women. The expected romantic misunderstandings with his sweetheart follow, but his ultimate success is amusingly assured in an original way. Madame Schuman-Heink plays a small part with a real gift for sympathetic comedy. She is a joy. The admirable cast, the settings in New York and Paris, and the almost continuous music, both light and classical, insure enjoyment of the highest type.

HIS FAMILY TREE  »  »
James Barton, Margaret Callahan. From the play "Old Man Murphy." Direction by Charles Vidor. R.K.O.

The Irishman in politics seems to be perennially the basis of a new stage or screen play. This time Charles Murfree, né Murphy, is hoping to be elected mayor of a middle western town with the doubtful aid of a fluttery, socially ambitious wife. Inopportune his disreputable hard drinking old father arrives from Ireland to take a hand in the election. Most of the interest of the story is lost in a medley of Irish fights, campaign songs, and radio oratory. The plot is hackneyed and the action boring.

The ethics of this comedy may be questioned if accepted seriously, insomuch as gambling is made an exciting and harmless diversion. For adults the picture is amusing. The daughter of a man who likes to bet on horse races is told she may marry her suitor when he is owner of the auto laundry where he is employed. The father bets the boy's nest egg, money on a sure tip. The fact that he wins in a thrilling finish is an hilarious climax for those who can evaluate its improbability.

LA MATERNELLE (Children of Montmartre)

We believe that "La Maternelle" is one of the finest examples we have ever seen of what an international exchange of films can do to create understanding and sympathy between different races. It is in no way propaganda; on the contrary, it is simply a very human, beautiful story of child psychology, remarkably acted by a cast from the Comédie Française, including a child who is an extraordinary artiste. The setting is a nursery school in the Montmartre district where children up to the age of eight or nine are housed, fed and taught until they are called for in the evening by the sort of parents one would expect in that irregular and poor community. The bitter emotional experiences of the little girl around whom the story centers are shown with restraint and subtlety, and the love for all the children with which Rose, the new maid, surrounds them, makes the school a haven of safety and happiness to those starved little creatures. The picture is Starkly realistic at times. The French attitude is not our own, but nothing can detract from the beauty of the psychology or from the certainty that all races are alike in their desire to give security and the best in life to children. We recommend this film in superlatives to adults. It is not a child's production.

Chester Morris, Sally Eilers. From the story by Lawrence C. Blochman. Screen play by Wells Root. Direction by Edwin L. Marin. M-G-M.

A small boy, supposedly kidnapped from his father and taken to his mother in Mexico, is subjected to an airplane crash, a wild automobile ride ending in a fire, and is made the object of pursuit by all manner of people who are trying to collect a reward for his capture. The picture is supposed to be both exciting and humorous but is neither, both because it is poorly done, and because kidnapping a child is too shocking an offense to be treated lightly even in the movies.

REDHEADS ON PARADE  »  »

Here is a typical back-stage musical with a fairly original story of turning the coun-

Had the picture been in color it would have been more effective, but otherwise it takes too much imagination to visualize the impression desired. The development of scenes, ensembles and music is undistinguished by any special charm. It is innocuous entertainment.

SANDERS OF THE RIVER

Viewing this picture one wonders whether it is serial, travelogue, nature study film or melodramatic fiction. It is over an hour and a half of burly Africans, mild Englishmen, native dancers, tribal rites, strange music and war cries interspersed with songs by Paul Robeson. The plot that binds these elements together concerns the efforts of an English government agent to hold savagery in check. Paul Robeson plays the role of a native chief who is loyal to the English. This is not unified drama but a collection of interesting and amazing pictures and beautiful singing. Probably one reason this is not convincing as drama is that Robeson comes out of character when he sings. Artistically it is not in any way comparable to "Emperor Jones," in connection with which one usually thinks of Robeson, but it will be more interesting to the general public.

Interesting but very tense

SHE GETS HER MAN

The director has turned good comedians loose in this shallow farce, and whatever amusement is to be found is due to their ability. Emeraldas (Zasu Pitts), the proprietress of the Bon Ton Lunch Room, foils a bank robbery through no merit of her own. A heroine at once, she goes lecturing on the abolition of crime. Kidnapped by the gangsters, she reforms them (accidentally of course) in a climax of absurdities. It is slapstick farce burlesqing gangsters, their luxurious ways of life, their ethics and the reform movement as well. Entertainment value is debatable.

SHE MARRIED HER BOSS

When an indispensable office secretary marries her boss with the expectation of assuming a new role in his home, she is disappointed to find that she has merely undertaken an additional job, home management in a chaotic household with an interfering aunt and a badly spoiled child to complicate the situation. After almost everybody has gone on a drinking spree the difficulties are adjusted and the lady is appreciated as a wife. Up to a certain point this is a witty and entertaining social comedy shedding a new light on the old story of the girl who marries her employer, but the ending is badly motivated and the assumption that when a situation is bad getting drunk will make it better is a stupid incongruity in an otherwise clever comedy.

SPECIAL AGENT

True to a recently established formula, the G-man gets his racketeer. The plot of this picture follows the case of Al Capone to the extent that an income-tax evasion is the ground for arrest. It is tensely interesting at times, particularly when the Federal agent, to suit his purpose, becomes voluntarily ensnared in gangland's web, but any film which induces applause at the occasion of violent death can hardly be recommended. Other items in its disfavor include a quality of weightiness which slows the action, overacting on the part of some of the minor characters and a tendency toward using outmoded bits of business.

STORM OVER THE ANDES

How a hard-boiled soldier of fortune uncovers the finer side of his nature is shown not very convincingly in this aviation adventure story. Jack Holt is the daredevil American flyer who joins the air force of Bolivia for the sheer love of a good fight. Single combat planes in fierce encounters, machine gunners dying at the controls and crashing to earth in flames are almost too thrilling. Romance and gay carnival scenes relieve the tension. High standards of courage, honor and self sacrifice are stressed, but the film still seems machine made. It follows too familiar a pattern to be received with enthusiasm, and no cast could make the trite lines seem inspired.

TOP HAT

Fred Astaire is without doubt the finest modern dancer in his line today. His effortless ease, mastery of technique and clever originality of "routine" are unexcelled. On the screen we are given an opportunity to see him perform in a way impossible for stage audiences, and the director of "Top Hat" has never allowed close-ups or action to obscure our view of the dances as we wish to enjoy them. For that our thanks to Mark Sandrich. In addition, the story is amusing, and the dialogue clever and sophisticated. The cast is excellent; Mr. Horton is perfect in the type of role he assumes so admirably, and Eric Blore is hilariously funny. Miss Rogers is lovely as usual and wins laurels in her increasing skill as dancing partner to Mr. Astaire, while the music of Irving Berlin should send everyone happily recalling harmonies and skipping gaily all the way home. "Top Hat" is excellent entertainment.

THUNDERSTORM

The objection to a picture of this sort for an American audience is that there is an aroma of insincerity about it, intangible but apparent. It is sombre drama with the tempo and atmosphere of a Greek tragedy. A young Russian girl with deep religious faith is married into a bourgeois family where a cruel matriarch makes happiness impossible. She is caught in the toils of inescapable destiny and goes helplessly to her tragic end. The acting is unusually fine, the cast including the famous Moscow Art Theatre players, and the character roles are of especial interest. But it is evidently a new form of propaganda—an effort to convince the Soviets that the new Russia is infinitely superior to the old conditions of religious bigotry, family subjugation and capitalistic rivalry.

VALLEY OF FEAR

A melodramatic mystery, with the well-known figure of Sherlock Holmes and Watson in detective roles, is satisfactorily worked out to a consistent finish with interest sustained throughout. Horror has been cut down to a minimum, and the British characterizations of American gangsters and coal miners will prove a new experience. It is acceptable adult entertainment.

WALTZ TIME IN VIENNA
Adolf Wohlbrueck, Renate Muller, Paul Hoerbiger, Willy Fritsch. Director, Ludwig Berger. Produced in Vienna by Guenther Stapenhorst.

This foreign film is utterly charming. The fact that it is done in German with English subtitles does not seriously detract from its enjoyment by American audiences. Set about the time of 1843, the plot concerns two rival waltz composers, Strauss and Lanner. The young Queen Victoria sends the court dancing master to Vienna to bring back its famous waltzes to England, hoping to induce the bashful Albert to declare his love for her under the romantic influence of the dance. The court scenes are lovely, the music is played in delightful rhythm, and the whole has a joyous flavor. It has the added advantage of the presence of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, directed by Aloys Melichar, rendering the exquisite waltzes.

SHORT SUBJECTS

ROMANCE OF THE WEST. Two reels. Warner Bros.-First National. This short picture is a pleasantly artistic presentation of cowboys and comedy in technicolor. Its thin plot is woven about the forced landing of a transcontinental passenger plane in the Wild West near a ranch where the delayed passengers find hospitality and entertainment in the form of expert roping and "hill-billy" music. Lovely views of the Yosemite and Grangd Canyon are included in the picture which is notable for scenic beauty. It is excellent family entertainment.

BETTY BOOP AND GRAMPY. Paramount. Betty visits Grampy in her usual gay musical fashion. Fair for family.

BIRD LAND. Terrytoon. Fox. Birds, cats and caterpillars try to outwit each other. The birds win. Good for family and children.

BUDDY STEPS OUT. Looney-tune. Vitaphone. Buddy lets the canary out and when it returns half frozen all the bric-a-brac comes to its assistance. Good for family.

CHARM LETTERS. Terrytoon. Fox. Farmyard inhabitants are struck by the chain letter craze. Fair for family.

CHINESE NIGHTINGALE. In color. M-G-M. Lovely story of the Chinese Emperor and his nightingale. It contains real pathos, humor and charming music as well as delightful drawings. Outstanding for all ages.

DANCING ON THE MOON. Color classic. Paramount. Honeymoon express takes animal bridal couples to the moon. Rather dull.

FIRE BRIGADE. Mickey Mouse in color. Walt Disney. Mickey and Donald Duck rescue Cora Cow from an exciting fire. Passable. Family.

FOXLEY FOX. Terrytoon. Fox. A fox outwits the hunters. Good for family.

SIRENS OF SYNCOPATION. Paramount. Hoagy Carmichael plays and sings his popular numbers. Entertaining for family.

TONY WON'S SCRAPBOOK No. 3. Principal. Beauty of waves, gardens, waterfalls and moon shadows, told in pictures and rhyme. Good for family.

BAER-BRADDUCK FIGHT. Principal. Authentic pictures. Tedious except for fight fans.

SPIFFS AND SPLASHES. Columbia. Water sports of all kinds illustrating amazing skill of performers. Excellent for family and children.

SPORTING NUTS. Oddity. M-G-M. Pete Smith describes interests of sportsmen, duck hunting, clam digging, catching swordfish. Excellent for family.

STRANGE CHAMPIONSHIPS. Medbury. Columbia. Water bicycles, a cat fishing, a bull-dog actor, etc. Family.

MAKING MANHANDLERS. Paramount. Excellent pictures of Annapolis and West Point, described by Ted Husing. Good. Family.

COMIC CRUISE GUATEMALA. Principal. Rather poor pictures accompanied by silly talk. Passable for family.

CITY OF JEWELS. M. M. Landers. San Francisco Fair of 1915 recalled in lovely pictures and excellent commentary. Family.

FAIR IN THE WEST. Paramount. General views of San Diego Fair and a number of Ford motor car exhibits.

PITCAIRN ISLAND TODAY. Oddity. M-G-M. Exceptionally interesting film showing the descendants of the Bounty crew, their homes and life on the island. The narrative is splendid. Family.

FAMOUS PEOPLE AT PLAY. Variety. Paramount. Will Rogers, King Gustav, King Peter, Carol of Roumania, etc., at their favorite pastimes.

FORWARD TOGETHER. See America First. Vitaphone. Events and inventions of national interest since 1913. Very good for family.

HUEY LONG, KINGFISH. Principal. All about Huey. Good, if you like him.

PICTORIAL No. 13. Paramount. Willard Robinson singing and playing; fashion foibles for women; cocktail recipes. Adults.

STRANGER THAN FICTION No. 10. Universal. Various oddities and people with strange occupations. Interesting for family.

BARBARY COAST  »  »

In this absorbing, exciting melodrama, the lawless, brutal fascination of San Francisco's former Barbary Coast is skillfully presented. Its murky atmosphere is cleverly suggested by the opening scenes of fog drenched harbor, ships, and shadowy district with its milling crowds of rough and drunken pleasure seekers. The story has a familiar theme—a woman bound to one man and loving another, but it entertains because the focus of interest is on the characters involved; Chamalis, Edward G. Robinson, in a fine portrayal of the ruthless, power-mad man, whose crimes are so outrageously flagrant that they inspire the organization of the Vigilantes; Mary Rutledge, Miriam Hopkins, subtly provocative, of whose past we are ignorant and whose greed for gold is as soul consuming as that of any male adventurer of the times; and James Carmichael, the inherent gentleman, idealistic, fine and likeable, sympathetically presented by Joel McCrea. The role of Old Atrocity, Walter Brennan, stands out also for its originality and its veracity. The production is colorful entertainment full of atmosphere and excitement, well written and directed with taste.

THE CASE OF THE LUCKY LEGS  »  »

It may seem an anomaly to call a film rollicking and a murder mystery in the same breath but both apply to this picture. A clever, unprincipled attorney is employed to find and prosecute the man who has absconded with the prize money of a beauty contest, the contest having centered particularly about the nether extremities of the contestants. The attorney and his secretary are quite gay and quite nonchalant and quite mad. By a process of reasoning which is amusing but impossible to follow, he finds the man, who by that time has been murdered, and then solves the mur-
The plot has little to offer that is new. The chief interest lies in the complete unexpectedness of the repartee. The picture leaves something to be desired as well rounded entertainment but compares favorably with most potboilers.

LA CRISE EST FINIE
(The Depression Is Over)
A very amusing parody, even in its grotesque optimism, of our lighter Hollywood musical productions, with delightful satirical touches, rapid action and typical continental humor. A group of artists who have lost their jobs in a city of southern France, come to Paris to start afresh, only to meet with the depression. Housed in an old abandoned theater by a charitable concierge they proceed with renewed vigor to rehearse an original musical production called The Depression is Over, and which is expected to revolutionize Paris. Follow a series of misfortunes and disappointments depicted in a humorous light, until opening night when the box offices are swamped and a great success is achieved. The song: La Crise est finie recurs constantly, first in the rehearsals, in snatches, then at the end as a whole, with its comical verses sung in the inimitable clipped French of Paris.

DR. SOCRATES

The central figures in this picture are a country doctor and a gang leader. The doctor who has taken up a small town practice because of a tragic experience in a former position, is first brought into contact with the gangsters when their leader comes to him and orders him at the point of a gun to give him surgical aid. Through other channels his connection continues and he even is suspected of complicity in their crimes until by an ingenious ruse he is the means of their capture. The story seems plausible if not probable, the atmosphere of small town life is realistically portrayed, and some of the characters are amusing. As in most pictures featuring gangsters there is a good measure of violence and gunplay. It is interesting to note that Paul Muni plays the doctor and not the gangster.

FRECKLES

The story takes place in beautiful forest country, enlivened by all the furred and feathered denizens of the virgin tract of timber known as the Limberlost. Tom Brown is a boyish likable Freckles but more important is small, plain-faced Virginia Weidler who plays the mischievous, outspoken child, Laurie Lou, so well that she is the focal point of interest throughout the film. In modernizing the plot the inevitable gangsters have been introduced with consequent gun-play, which detracts from the value of a picture that should otherwise be pleasing and instructive for children.

FIGHTING YOUTH

This picture portrays the efforts of a group of radicals to wreck society by disrupting college football. Our hero is induced by a fair radical to fumble the ball, thereby losing a game to a rival team. Later we are solemnly assured that he did not mean to fumble, it was all an accident. The hard-boiled coach keeps him on the bench until the last few minutes of the local "Big Game," when, of course, he is called in to save the day for dear old Siwash. A collegiate "G-Man" steps in to clear out the radicals, lovers are reunited and all is well. The action of the coach in importing an even more hard-boiled confrere to instill fighting spirit into the team by driving them with harsh words to such a pitch of effort in practice that three of their number were seriously injured raises a point of ethics that is at least debatable. Perpetual under-graduates of any age may find interest in this production, but it has little appeal for more sophisticated audiences.

HARMONY LANE

Into this biography of Stephen Foster are woven the songs he wrote, and these lovely old melodies are given a new meaning as they are correlated with the events of the composer's life. A colored minister, played delightfully by Clarence Muse, is the inspiration for "Old Black Joe" and Evelyn Venable as Susan Pentland, whom Foster loved, is "Susanna" of the ballad. The picture reveals the pathetic frustration of a genius who lived at a time when his art won little appreciation. Excellent acting and direction combine with its educational and dramatic values to make it an exceptional production.

HERE COMES COOKIE

Gracie Allen's radio fans may enjoy her repeat some of her familiar brand of nonsense in this utterly absurd hodge-podge. Gracie is the extra dumb daughter of a rich man who turns over all his money to her in an attempt to discourage a fortune hunter interested in her other daughter. The fun begins when Gracie conceives the idea of converting her father's house into a home for indigent actors and then into a theatre where she puts on a variety show. Acrobat, trained seals, performing dogs and troupes of musicians swarm over the house practicing their acts, and a miraculously expert drummer gives an exhibition of his skill. Those who consider Gracie's famous colossal stupidity amusing will undoubtedly get their money's worth, but there is not enough other material in the picture to interest anyone else.

HI GAUCHO

In comparison with the Gaucho of Douglas Fairbanks, fearless, vibrant with life and color, John Carroll's seems bloodless and in-effectual, and indeed the whole production is much thinner in substance. It has some gaiety and stirring music and a good deal of action if little excitement, but it does not seem indigenous to South America; the country resembles California more than the Argentine, while the characters seem to have come from the operatic stage instead of real life.

I LIVE FOR LOVE

Here is farce comedy with music, acceptable for family audiences because it has an unsophisticated story which is easy to follow and some tuneful clowning reminiscent of the Marx Brothers at their idiotic best. On the whole, however, it is disappointing. The roles are routine, and the singing undistinguished. Its hackneyed plot, concerning stage folk, provides the required glamour and the opportunity to introduce exotic costumes and a few songs. If theatres must have double bills, this picture has a place. It cannot stand alone on its own merits.

KING SOLOMON OF BROADWAY

Either this picture waives the Producers voluntary code of ethics or else interpretation of the code is very loose, because "King Solomon of Broadway" portrays the most destructive social elements possible. Its hero forfeits control of his night club in a poker game with professional gangsters. His partner appears on parole from Sing Sing to complicate the deal. A blues singer and an unconventional society girl out for “thrills” create the romantic conflict. There are two automobile wrecks, a kidnapping and a nerve-racking chase by the police. Liquor flows freely, one dancing exhibition (by Louise Henry) is unpleasantly coarse, the lines and innuendoes are often risqué, and at times the plot is confusing. Edward Pawley plays the most convincingly disreputable criminal we have seen, which is perhaps an artistic achievement for him but scarcely worth his effort, while Pinky Tomlin is given little opportunity to prove whether his personality will be as popular on the screen as in a ballroom. For discriminating audiences it has no entertainment value. It is cheap from every point of view.

THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII

This picture will be a disappointment to those who go expecting to see a portrayal of the Bulwer-Lytton masterpiece. It has nothing to do with the long beloved classic and the title is a consciously misleading bait. It is less a story than a spectacle and as such is interesting. The scenes are laid in the ancient city in the era just prior to its destruction and the background, the costuming and all the other properties of “atmosphere” are so well done that to many the story will seem of secondary importance. It pictures the ruthless rise to fame and fortune of one “Marcus,” a gladiator, and his choice between his own bitter philosophy of life and the altruistic teachings of the Christ. The few scenes which include the Savior are handled with restraint and judgment. His presence is merely indicated, never shown. But the story is somewhat bungled. One feels that the verities have been sacrificed to melodrama, and brutal violence in several instances unfit it for sensitive children. It is interesting technically, an impressive spectacle with an over-emotional story which yet may have popular appeal.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT’S DREAM

Shakespeare on the screen is a daring innovation because probably no other source of material will ever cause more controversy. In the case of adult spectators there is always personal prejudice to overcome, the result of precedent. It must have been a bitter time for lovers of the English stage when women first played the roles in which boys had appeared, or when a semblance of a wooden set first replaced the sign “This is a wood.” And so today the lavish sets, stunning costumes, masks, “atmosphere” and photographic miracles elaborated by Max Reinhardt may seem redundant to the critical few. But too few Americans have had the opportunity to see Shakespeare’s plays as the Stratford-on-Avon companies present them or in the simple perfection of the Globe Theatre at the San Diego Fair. “Midsummer Night’s Dream” is an exquisite fantasy, a fairy-like production which is improved, we think, by all the magic available to the screen. Warner Brothers’ production is a signal achievement, opening to every man, woman and child in the world a field of literature in a form which intrigues imagination and enriches experience.

Quite apart from its merit for adults it is our greatest privilege to recommend it to children. “Midsummer Night’s Dream” is the type of fantasy which is closest to their taste; a world of fairies, dwarfs, and imps, of pomp and ceremony, of magic and fun, pranks and burlesque, of chase and pursuit. The exquisite settings, lovely dances and beautiful and familiar Mendelssohn music are fitting background for the gay and hilarious action. For children we can imagine no more perfect introduction to Shakespeare than this picture.

From a production standpoint the picture is most interesting. The musical arrangement is outstanding. Hal Mohr is a distinguished artist and the photographic beauty of the scenes is memorable. The masks, adapted from the Arthur Rackham drawings, and the ass’s head are uniquely clever illusions. The ballets are exquisite. The casting is very satisfactory; Olivia de Haviland is a fine selection for Hermia, charming and convincing in her role, but we could wish that Dick Powell had toned down his light opera technique to match her sincerity; Anita Louise is as lovely as our imagination paints the beautiful Titania, and Victor Jory is a sombre and dignified Oberon. The surprise of the production is James Cagney as Bottom. He was a happy choice. Physically less rounded than the usual selection, he is splendid in the role, giving fine depth to the bewilderment and tragedy, contrasting with its humor, and Joe E. Brown’s sensitive touch and his inimitable gift for comedy ends the picture on a high peak of genuine hilarity. We consider this a memorable presentation and wish for it the success it richly deserves.

THE MURDER OF DR. HARRICAN

There is little ingenuity in the plot of this mystery tale which deals with the sudden death of a doctor universally disliked by his patients and colleagues. The crime is readily solved, and the variety of incident in a laxly administered hospital is given more importance than the central theme. The film escapes mediocrity because it is handled in a pleasant manner, has a good cast and presents an interesting series of hospital scenes.

MUSIC IS MAGIC

Alice Faye, Ray Walker, Bebe Daniels, Mitchell and Durant, Rosina Lawrence, Thomas Beck. Adapted from the play "Private Beach" by Gladys Unger and Jesse Lasky, Jr. Direction by George Marshall. Fox.

A fading cinema star on a personal appearance tour and a troupe of three young "hoofers" and two comedians in a small vaudeville company are the characters whose adventures furnish the material for this zestful musical comedy. When their show is broken up by the temperamental behavior of the movie star they all go to Hollywood where they finally manage to get into pictures. The comedy is supplied by the well known Mitchell and Durante combination and reaches the height of slap-stick technique in a wild scene in a restaurant when guests and management engage in a battle royal. Bebe Daniels does a clever bit of characterization as the disagreeable movie star. The picture ends in a grand finale of songs and dances with the whole cast present and more of the slapstick antics of the comedians. Though somewhat raucous it is good entertainment.

NAVY WIFE

Kathleen Norris’ stories are melodramatic romances which generally have appeal for a large, but not always critical group of readers. This film follows the same formula. The motivation lacks subtlety, the humor is broad, and the dialogue redundant. It tells the story of a girl embittered towards marriage by her parents’ divorce. Although she falls in love and reluctantly marries, she is very unhappy until, after a scene in which she tries to drown her sorrows in drink, she finally realize that her husband is worthy of her trust and love. Her husband’s behavior during this period is not clearly enough explained to justify the emotional strain, and the performances of the cast do nothing to clarify the situation. The film seems poorly cut with irrelevant sequences which slow up the action.

O’SHAUGHNESSY’S BOY

Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper. Direction by Richard Boleslawski. M-G-M.

Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper do another father and son act, and as usual do it well. How O’Shaughnessy finds his "Stubby" and wins back his love is appealing and sentimental, but one wishes that this development of the father-son relationship could be handled quietly and with more finesse. O’Shaughnessy’s courage grows in proportion to the winning of his boy’s love and manifests itself by his leaping into a cage full of snarling leopards and trumpeting elephants. The noise is terrific. The whole picture is keyed high and overdone so much so that what might have been poignantly beautiful and moving is lost in a blare of excitement. Surely even a circus must have its quiet moments.

Almost all the difficulties that can beset the path of a sports writer who wants to be square are placed in the path of the hero of this newspaper melodrama. PERSONAL MAID’S SECRET  » »

The story is a social comedy of middle class New York life, based chiefly on the efforts of Lizzie, maid of all work in the Smith’s apartment, to improve the social and financial status of her employers. Complications are introduced when Diana Abercrombie, played by Anita Louise, meets the Smith family and Lizzie takes an unusual interest in her affairs. There is rivalry between Kent Fletcher, Mrs. Smith’s brother, and Warren Sherill, a married man, for Diana’s affections. A secondary love interest develops between Lizzie and Owen, the butler, played by Arthur Treacher with much humor and personality. The picture, of course, belongs to Lizzie, Ruth Donnelly gives the part strength and humor and by her acting redeems to a considerable extent a sketchy and improbable plot.

Harry Carey, Hoot Gibson, “Boots” Mallory. From the novel by William Colt MacDonald. Direction by Wallace Fox. RKO.

All anyone can say about this picture is that it is typically “western.” The hero is successful in ridding the country of a wicked sheriff who has instituted a reign of terror in his community. To accomplish this benefit he has to shoot at least a dozen people. The picture portrays violence from beginning to end and most of the characters are unnecessarily crude and uncouth.

PUBLIC MENACE  » »

A newspaper gangster plot brings some exciting incidents to a hackneyed theme. The young reporter is assigned to a story concerning Frenelli, a famous gangster. While searching for Frenelli the reporter encounters a beauty parlor operator, who induces him to marry her on the representation that she has important information as to the operations of the gangster. The information proves nonexistent, the young man loses his job, and the subsequent tribulations, marital and otherwise, of the couple furnish amusing, if light, entertainment.

RED SALUTE  » »

Red Salute is a fast moving farce about a general’s daughter who has her heart set on a communist but finds headier adventures in the company of an ordinary buck private. It is entertainment in its lightest and most unimportant form. The story, beginning with a scene in which a young radical harrangues his fellow students at a mass meeting, drops almost immediately both the radical and his theories and does not return to this theme again until the very end of the story, when the young soldier-hero of the play mounts the rostrum in defense of law and order. The chief concern of the plot is to follow the preposterous adventures of the soldier and the girl who steal a government car at the Mexican border and lead the police on a merry chase to Washington, D.C. The romance of the young couple is developed almost entirely by means of brittle dialogue in which they attempt to conceal from each other the fact that they are falling in love.

If the picture has any message it is not very clear since the theme is forgotten by author and audience alike while the characters play the favorite American game of eluding the police.

SHIPMATES FOREVER

Like “Annapolis Farewell” this picture is made with the cooperation of the United States Navy and uses as its background the Naval Academy and the life of the midshipmen. It is remarkably interesting both in story value and in the intimate views of Annapolis and its traditions. Dick Powell plays the part of Richard John Melville III, son of an admiral and descendant of a long line of navy officers. He is a crooner in a night club when the picture opens and in spite of his father’s wishes has refused to enter the Naval Academy. Later he is persuaded to take the examination and becomes one of the entering class. His adjustment to the life there, his contacts with fellow students, the strengthening of his character and his eventual acceptance of his opportunities make an absorbingly interesting story full of humor, pathos and drama. Ruby Keeler, looking delightfully young and charming, supplies the romantic interest. The fact that three songs are interpolated does not interrupt the logical development of the plot. Both Dick Powell’s singing and Ruby Keeler’s dancing are very cleverly introduced in a plausible manner quite compatible with the spirit of the picture. Interest is not entirely focused on Dick Powell. His three roommates are exceedingly well portrayed and their problems are an integral part of the story. Lewis Stone as the father does his usual excellent work. In addition to other good points there are some thrilling scenes of the fleet on review. “SHIPMATES FOREVER” should have great popularity with all kinds of audiences.

THIRTY-NINE STEPS

The Thirty-Nine Steps” is a thrillingly exciting mystery story. Its only drawback for American audiences is, curiously enough, the English dialogue, spoken so quickly with its characteristic inflections that clues are occasionally lost. In spite of this it is one of the best. The title refers to an international spy ring, selling secrets of the English Air Ministry. Richard Hannay (Richard Donat) attends a music hall. During the performance a murder is committed and a panic ensues. He rescues a woman and takes her to his rooms. She asks to spend the night admitting that she is a spy, is responsible for the murder and is in great danger. Although he does not believe her, he agrees and is horrified to have her mysteriously murdered while in his flat. He then decides to take up her search for the criminal without notifying the police. His adventures thereafter are varied, exciting and amusing, as he eludes the police who think he killed the woman found in his rooms, and as he also comes under the suspicion of the spy ring. It is very well directed and admirably acted and has the added interest for us of the Scottish moors as setting for much of the action. It is excellent entertainment.

THREE MUSKETEERS

Lively action, thrilling in many sequences, is the keynote of this entertaining costume melodrama. The scenarist has taken liberties with the original and condensed the high spots of a long story into one episode with the result that the characterizations are somewhat sketchy and the film lacks color for one who is not familiar with the original. Walter Abel, a newcomer to pictures, is at first disappointing. He is not the dashing, handsome, athletic d'Artagan of Fairbanks' silent film, nor the romantic figure that imagination pictures from the book. He is, however, a skilled actor, and his personality grows upon one as the picture progresses. The comradeship and loyal bonds which bind the Three Musketeers, and their acceptance of d'Artagnan, are not elaborated, nor are Lady de Winter's wickedness, Richelieu's scheming brilliance and de Rochefort's duplicity as definitely painted as we could wish. It all needs the fuller background of Dumas' notable classic, yet the picture is good entertainment, humorous, dashing, exciting and romantic.

In this murder mystery, set in Budapest, a husband, who has long been thought dead, returning to his wife who has remarried, supplies the complications that lead to his eventual shooting. Edmund Lowe as Captain Torok, supposedly the brains of the police department, seems too flippant to rate as one of the master minds, but nevertheless he solves the murder to everyone's satisfaction. The solution does not involve any novel line of thought but suspense is well maintained and the picture is acceptable light entertainment.

This light comedy has a rambling plot that appears to have been made up as the picture progressed. Bing Crosby plays the part of Gilbert, one of three sons in a family who are about to be ejected from their home because they cannot pay their debts. Their only hope seems to be the possibility that Gilbert may write a successful musical comedy. This he does with the aid of his secretary with whom he falls in love. Ernest Cossart in the role of butler furnishes most of the humor. Bing Crosby may win feminine hearts with his songs but probably only his most ardent fans will derive much entertainment from this production.

An unpretentious but exceedingly human and sincere story is told in this photoplay. Using the background of a sleepy southern town and the humorous antics of its childlike negro population, it first introduces us to Judge Calhoun Davis, a character reminiscent of Judge Priest. The interest then turns to the step-son of Judge Davis, a moody discontented youth who cannot adjust himself to his family life or conquer his envy of other young people in the town. The Judge's handling of a very serious predicament in which the boy is involved is both inspiring and touching. The film is intelligently acted and directed and is dramatic without being sentimental.

Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda, Slim Summerville, Edward Trevor, Margaret Hamilton. From the play by Lottie Fonda. Screen play by Howard Estabrook and William Hurlbut. Direction by Henry King. 20th Century-Fox.

This story is almost too well known to need outlining. Considering that it is practically a byword for old-fashioned melodrama, it is remarkable how charming and interesting this classic has become in the able hands of Mr. Estabrook and Mr. Hurlbut. The stern squire, the unhappy, betrayed girl, the hero and the villain are still present, and there is a thrilling race with death when the heroine has fled in a snowstorm and is about to perish in an icy river, but the melodramatics are nicely subdued, and without being entirely modernized or losing its old time flavor, the play is presented in a way that appeals to present day audiences. Its homespun sincerity makes it appealing, and exquisite country scenery gives it an unusual degree of charm.

This is another one of the innumerable modern versions of the story of "Enoch Ar-

A young girl impetuously marries a self-confessed rake, and when we see her six years later we discover that in the interim the husband has been reported dead, and she has married a young English doctor about to be knighted for his medical research. At this juncture, the familiar figure of the blackmailer appears. The plot is mechanical and unconvincing and the implications of character unsound, but owing to a certain sincerity in the acting, the play is saved from utter trashiness. It will appeal to audiences to whom the stock plot properties of the bigamous marriage, the woman blackmailer and the chivalrous second husband are forever intriguing, but there is little in it to impress a mature and discriminating mind.

EDITORIAL

Many groups all over the United States are engaged in the work of trying to secure suitable family programs for children's matinees, and a gratifyingly large number of theatre managers are sincerely trying to cooperate to win the approval of the Better Films Committees. That the ever increasing demand for the family type of film is being met by producers is indicated by the astonishing proportion of pictures starred in our current index for family suitability, but the pictures considered appropriate for children under twelve are almost as scarce as ever. This scarcity is certainly no fault of local theatre managers, but it presents a major obstacle in the path of approved children's matinees. There are still not enough really good pictures to make up a good matinee each week. Much as all the previewing organizations deplore the presence of children under nine years old in the theatres, it is still a fact that Saturday afternoon audiences are composed largely of small children unattended by adults, and many of these children are only five or six years old. What then should be the attitude of a Better Films Committee towards a theatre manager who wants to run a "children's matinee" and hopes to have the approval of the local organizations?

The Women's University Club requires that certain definite conditions be fulfilled before it gives its approval to a program planned for children. We require not only that the picture shown be suitable but that the program be composed entirely of suitable entertainment, that it be not too long (no double bills), that proper conditions of lighting, ventilation and chap-eronage be observed and that there be no serials, door prizes or other bonuses tending to attract children to another program which may not be approved or to establish the habit of regular attendance at weekly shows. In our experience locally it has not been possible to secure an afternoon program complying with these conditions. Due to the policy of double billing, even though a suitable picture is shown first, the children invariably see the whole long program and apparently nothing can be done about it. The Women's University Club therefore does not give its sanction to any such matinees.

However, a new experiment is now being tried by the manager of a local theatre. He has submitted programs to the previewing groups for approval. They are to be shown at morning matinees under the conditions deemed proper by the concensus of opinion of such groups.
This is a great step ahead for children's entertainment. If these morning matinees are a financial success, as we hope they will be, the manager will want to continue them. But will he be able to guarantee an approved unit program each week or every other week?

The Better Films Committee cannot conscientiously give a blanket approval to a particular theatre no matter how good are the intentions of the theatre manager. They may approve any number of programs planned in advance when they know exactly what it is to be included, but it is absolutely necessary to know not only that there will be a Shirley Temple picture, for instance, but what Shirley Temple picture, not only that there will be two color cartoons but what cartoons, not only that there will be an entertainer, but what entertainer and exactly what the act will be. If the children are allowed to go to an approved program, will they be induced by door prizes, clubs, serials, etc., to want to patronize the next matinee which may not be approved? These are some of the points to be most carefully considered by any organization when it is asked to give its support to a children's program, but no organization can assume the responsibility of recommending any picture or program for any individual child. What is suitable for the majority of children of a certain age may be most upsetting for little Tom Jones or Sally Smith. If Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith study the temperaments and mentalities of their own children and inform themselves about the films that are offered, they should be the ultimate judges of whether or not their children should attend.

By intelligent perusing of various conscientious reviews such as those offered in this magazine and others of its kind, parents should be able to determine the appropriateness of any picture for their own children. Better Films Committees, Motion Picture Councils and Theatre Managers can help you to a certain extent in providing entertainment for children, but for your own child, Mother, you must do your part.

THE AFFAIRS OF SUSAN

That wistfully comic, pathetic character known to cinema audiences as Zasu Pitts is the heroine of this touching little comedy. In the guise of a lonely girl from a candy shop she goes to Coney Island on her day off and by chance meets a young mechanic, another lonesome soul. The course of their resultant friendship and romance is delightfully told. If the picture had no other merits, the fact that it offers Miss Pitts a role to match her ability would make it worth the price of admission. It has, however, the added virtue of telling a simple, straightforward and appealing human story with just the right amount of laughter and pathos.

ANNE OAKLEY

Fifty years ago Annie Oakley was the crack rifle shot of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show. The picture of her life is steeped in the atmosphere of a bygone period when tastes were simpler, and the blare of trumpets, rush of charging horses and yells of Indians on the war-path furnished entertainment fit for the crowned heads of Europe. There is no complexity of characters. Annie is straightforward and has a heart of gold to the very end; the humor is hearty, and even the lighting seems to partake of the gleam of a kerosene lamp. Sometimes the dialogue is too uncouth for modern ears, occasionally the country folk are too loutish, but the film should attract those who enjoy a circus and those who like to recall the days of wash bowls and pitchers and the first faltering telephones.

THE BIG BROADCAST OF 1936

This picture might be compared to an elaborate table d'hote dinner, more than one is accustomed to but nice for a change. It includes all sorts of radio and vaudeville en-entertainers and has a fantastic rambling plot that runs the gamut of everything from melodrama to slapstick. It starts in a broadcasting station where Jack Oakie as Spud, the great lover of “WGY,” croons daily to an adoring feminine audience. He incurs the jealous enmity of a rampaging countess who kidnaps him and his partner on her yacht and takes them both to a mysterious island. They have with them an invention of Gracie Allen and George Burns called the Radio Eye, which picks up by television all sorts of scenes. It is in these pick-ups that the audience sees various famous entertainers in a variety of skits. In the production there is something of interest to almost everyone. It is diverting entertainment reminiscent of the days when vaudeville houses flourished.

Here is a delightfully entertaining combination, in an English setting, of mystery, satirical humor and romance. The fun commences when a young girl announces her intention of staging a hold-up. She enlists the aid of a traveling American and later of an English Bishop and his old maid sister who are delighted with the opportunity to exercise their knowledge of crime and sleuthing gleaned from invertebrate reading of detective novels. The story travels at a lively clip from Limehouse to the Bishop's study with everyone becoming more and more involved in the mysterious disappearance of a valuable wallet. The various foibles of the oddly assorted characters are cleverly used to enhance the humor. Suspense is exceptionally well maintained and the unraveling of the mystery is skillfully handled.

CHARLIE CHAN'S SECRET  » »

Even without the deft touch of Earl Derr Biggers, Warner Oland impersonating Charlie Chan in the solving of a murder mystery is well worth going to see. This story lacks some of the pat Chinese philosophy we are wont to expect from Charlie Chan, but it is a good mystery yarn. The setting is San Francisco, the problem, the finding of the murderer of a certain Alan Colby, long supposed dead but in reality only recently assassinated by one who wished to profit by his demise. In the quest for evidence Charlie Chan exposes spiritual seances. Some of the scenes are rather creepy. The suspense is well maintained and the plot is sufficiently logical in its development to be reasonably convincing.

THE EAGLE'S BROOD  » »

The latest of the Hop-Along Cassidy pictures is based on a frontier tradition that a man saved from death is honor bound to perform as noble a deed for his rescuer. In this case the deputy-sheriff is indebted to a bandit. As in the run-of-the-mill Westerns there are smiling heroes and glowing villains, all riding past with clanking spurs against a background of beautiful mountain peaks and canyons. There is little depth or originality in the production, and it is suitable chiefly for those who place brawn above brains in the cinema.

As in “Barbary Coast,” San Francisco in the days of the Vigilantes is the colorful setting for this dramatic story. James Cagney as Bat Morgan is the self-made leader of the underworld and one of the rulers of the tough element. Margaret Lindsay plays Jean Barrat, daughter of the leading newspaper owner and typical of San Francisco’s upper crust. These two meet. Morgan falls in love at first sight and, influenced by his desire to win her, tries to make a position for himself among the better element. Local color abounds, especially in the scenes of the Barbary Coast area, the incidents in the political warfare are dramatic and the love story, however improbable, is well enough handled to hold the sympathy of the audience.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE

This is a light comedy about a manicurist whose main ambition in life is to marry a rich man, and a young ex-millionaire with a desire to become the husband of a rich woman in order to avoid working for a living. Both find what they have been looking for, but having found it decide that love means more. The parts are well cast, and the photography, lighting and dialogue all contribute to the feeling of joie de vivre that the picture conveys. Certain unconventional situations in the plot are handled with such a degree of expertness and lightness of touch that they are not offensive.

I FOUND STELLA PARISH

Mother love is the dominant chord in this film of a successful actress who leaves London at the height of her career lest the damaging exposure of her unfortunate past should darken her small daughter’s life. Although the story is somewhat melodramatic, and the plot when dispassionately analyzed is a bit maudlin, unpleasant facts are usually suggested, never emphasized, parts are not overplayed, and Kay Francis is appealing in the mother role. Due to expert direction and the charm of Miss Francis it is better-than-average entertainment.

For most audiences there is a never failing appeal in a play that shows the taming of a spoiled rich girl by an outspoken he-man from the wide open spaces. Such is the theme of “I Live My Life.” Joan Crawford as the blase lady of luxury meets an Irish archeologist on an island near Greece. After a flirtation which only he takes seriously, he follows her to New York with the easily foreseen consequence that she returns with him to dig for ancient statuary. It is a spirited, attractively produced and entertaining comedy.

IN PERSON

This is a rollicking comedy of the type which will appeal to an audience seeking relaxation unattended by emotional strain. It makes no pretense at either plausibility or subtle characterization, but it attains its mission of providing an evening of wholesome fun. The story concerns a temperamental young movie actress who, on the verge of a nervous breakdown from a too strenuous season of work, is advised by her psychiatrist to seek complete seclusion in the wilderness. Meeting by chance an attractive young ornithologist who is going to his mountain cabin to study certain types of birds, she suggests that she become his guest, and this unconventional arrangement is adopted. The farcical scenes which follow concern his efforts to make her do the housekeeping and her efforts to convince him that she is really a celebrated movie star and hence above menial work. There is, of course, “the other man” who discovers her hideout and follows her, with amusing complications. The slight plot gives Ginger Rogers opportunity for one of her popular song-and-dance specialties and frequent opportunities for intriguing changes of costume.

IT’S IN THE AIR

If you are not one who is likely to be amused by the form of wit used by Jack Benny and Ted Healy, stay away from this picture, for boredom will set in before the first fifty feet of film have been run. The story concerns two skin game artists wanted by Federal officers for illegal financial transactions. One of them, wishing to effect a reconciliation with his estranged wife, goes to see her at a desert resort. There he poses as a stratosphere exploration enthusiast and manages to get the backing of some sponsors who are interested in the advertisement the balloon flight will bring. Most improbably the flight sets a record which seems to obliter ate the fact that the balloonists are fugitives from justice. The picture is ethically bad because, although the crooks reform, their comedy and the spirit in which their shady deeds are performed hold the sympathy of the audience throughout. The picture is light comedy, dependent upon wisecracks for its entertainment value.

THE LAST OUTPOST
Cary Grant, Claude Rains, Gertrude Michael, Kathleen Burke. From the story by F. Britten Austin. Directed by Louis Gasnier and Charles Barton. Paramount.

The story of "The Last Outpost" takes place during the World War, when the British had to cope with serious outbreaks among the Kurds and the natives of the Soudan. There is a strong atmosphere of the East, but too many changes of scene, too much rattling of machine gun fire and too many narrow escapes make the picture seem exaggerated. The plot, far from unusual, deals with two men in love with one woman whose choice entails success for one and bitter sacrifice for the other.

LITTLE AMERICA

The cameramen who accompanied Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd on his second voyage into the Antarctic have done their best to bring us the salient features of the expedition. They not only reveal the technical details of the ship, planes and equipment used in surmounting the natural hazards in the wastes of ice and snow, but they emphasize the importance of the human element in such an undertaking. They picture each man, whether a doctor ministering to the sick, a scientist collecting new material or a musician trying to break the monotony of the long winter night, fulfilling his allotted part under the indomitable leadership of Admiral Byrd. It is a fine picture which adds to one's store of information and cannot fail to interest young and old.

THE MAN WHO BROKE THE BANK AT MONTE CARLO
Ronald Colman, Joan Bennett, Colin Clive, Nigel Bruce, Montagu Love. From the play by Ilia Surgutchoff and Frederick Albert Swann. Direction by Stephen Roberts. Twentieth Century-Fox.

There is a spark of adventure in the very mention of the gaming tables at Monte Carlo, and when a young taxi driver who began life as a Russian prince is blessed with a prodigious succession of winning numbers, there are bound to be romantic repercussions. Throughout the play there is an atmosphere of gaiety and whimsy with a measure of pathos, enough sophistication in treatment to engage the seasoned theatre-goers and enough of the Graustarkian brand of imagination to please younger audiences. There is nothing morally subversive, and a lesson is appended to the effect that gambling never pays. The dialogue is good but not outstanding. Perhaps one could wish that Ronald Colman had a little more dash in some of the scenes, but on the whole the mood is well sustained.

A simple unexciting but adequate story offers opportunity for Lawrence Tibbett to display his beautiful voice in several types of songs. As a competent opera singer he leaves the New York Metropolitan because his name is not sufficiently well known to induce the manager to give him prominent roles. A temperamental diva takes him as star in a company she has organized to open in Philadelphia. Her variable orders make the opportunities for him to sing such lovely arias as the "Toreador Song" from "Carmen," "Largo Al Factotum" from "The Barber of Seville" and the prologue from "Pagliacci." He also sings "The Road to Mandalay" and the negro spiritual "De Glory Road" with the technical excellence and the dramatic interpretation which has made his voice triumphant today. His role is better suited to his personality than his former screen vehicle. All the characterizations are exceptionally good, the direction spirited and the orchestration noteworthy. The production is distinctive musically and it entertains lightly from the story viewpoint.

Dick Foran, Sheila Manners, George E. Stone, Joe Sawyer. Direction by D. Ross Lederman. Warner Brothers.

An exciting stampede, some beautiful mountain scenery and good riding are the points of interest in this "Western," but these do not make it worthy of recommendation. The plot is exceedingly obvious, the acting stilted and the dialogue poor. Two desperados murder a ranch owner and conspire to cheat his widow and child of their inheritance. When their first attempts to do away with the woman and the small boy are frustrated by a chivalrous cowboy the villains continue their devilish machinations until several people have been killed and everyone has had numerous hair-breadth escapes. There is no moonlight and no prairie, but a song rendered by the hero gives the picture its title.

A NIGHT AT THE OPERA  »  »

The debut of two young singers provides the background for the antics of the Marx brothers. After a very poor opening scene the picture moves swiftly and will probably entertain those who enjoy the Marx brothers. The cast has been well chosen, and Allan Jones proves to be more interesting than the fourth Marx brother used to be. The music is unusually good but any real music lover would be annoyed at the constant interruptions by the vulgar comedy gags. Chico and Harpo play interesting solos on the piano and harp respectively. Artistically the producers essayed the impossible when they combined high class music with low class burlesque. The result is a hybrid sort of entertainment.

PADDY O’DAY  »  »

This is the story of a young Irish immigrant girl coming to America alone, steerage, to join her mother who has been acting as maid for an overstudious young ornithologist and his doting old maid aunts. Paddy is met at Ellis Island with the news of her mother’s death, but refusing to believe it, escapes from the island, and, through the help of an Irish policeman, arrives at her mother’s former place of employment. She completely captivates and revivifies the young bookworm while his aunts are in Europe, and plays cupid for his love affair with a beautiful young Russian who had befriended her aboard ship. Jane Withers charmingly displays her varied talents for singing, dancing and acting, but is particularly charming when she forgets to use an Irish brogue.

THE RAINMAKERS  »  »

Wheeler and Woolsey pictures are usually clean and silly. This one seems to have been made to emphasize all the characteristics of the comedy team and will probably have little appeal except for their admirers. An inventor of a rain-producing machine and his assistant arrive in a drought-smitten land of lima beans and indulge in no end of antics and facial contortions, winding up with a wild and ridiculous escapade as engineers on a pair of runaway locomotives. Children should enjoy it hugely.

SHIP CAFE  »  »

The story of “Ship Cafe” is neither novel nor well-told. It is built around a stoker on an ocean liner who becomes “bouncer” in a gay resort and subsequently the darling of a visiting countess. Acting and direction are only fair. Even the night-club scenes are devoid of any real gaiety or amusement. The film is lifted from utter banality by the bright dialogue and rapid-fire comments which are admirably suited to the situations.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY  »  »

Terrific suspense is the keynote of this exciting kidnap story which deals, not with the actual “snatching,” but with what happens to the innocent young couple who, with their baby, fall into the clutches of the kidnapers after the ransom money is collected. It is modern, tense, and moves swiftly to an unusual conclusion, where a woman does more than her share in a battle which would have tried the nerve of any man. The persistence and intelligence of the Department of Justice is an admirable note, but a great deal of killing is shown. Skillful direction is responsible for the naturalness of the characters. Cleverly interspersed comedy touches somewhat relieve the emotional tension which is sustained to the final scenes.

THE SPANISH CAPE MYSTERY » »
Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Cook, Burton Churchill. Story by Ellery Queen. Direction by Lewis D. Collins. Republic.

Ellery Queen, famous detective of fiction, is here depicted as a smart-aleck of the most offensive type. His wise-cracks at the expense of the comedy sheriff fall rather flat, and the deductive processes by which he solves the mystery after the sheriff confesses failure are left largely to the imagination of the audience. The action begins with the kidnaping by a mysterious stranger of Stella Godfrey (Helen Twelvetrees) and her uncle from the Godfrey mansion on the California Coast. Stella is left bound and gagged in a neighboring house to be discovered by Ellery Queen and a companion on a vacation trip. The uncle does not reappear. During the ensuing investigation three murders are committed and everyone in the Godfrey's house party is at one time or another under suspicion. A love interest is introduced between Stella and Ellery. Miss Twelvetrees looks charming but not very convincing in the part.

STARS OVER BROADWAY » »

James Melton, popular radio singer, appears in the film as Jan King, singing hotel porter, who is taken in hand by an impresario (played by Pat O'Brien) and made into grand opera material. Though it has some of the same elements as several recent musical films it has a less serious story, some surprise situations and clever dialogue and is differently handled from the other grand opera films we have seen. Pat O'Brien, though he is only the impresario, is the one on whom most of the romantic interest is focused. James Melton sings beautifully. Frank McHugh has an excellent comedy role and as usual extracts its full content of humor. The whole thing is geared to a fast pace and should please anyone looking for a light entertainment. It provides a good deal of beautiful music but evidently Melton's singing and the rendition of classical arias are not supposed to be the chief attraction.

A boy rescues a motherless colt in a remote part of the desert and brings him up to be a well trained horse. Though told in a rather melodramatic fashion the story of Stormy, the boy, and Rex, the horse, is an unusually good western. Pictures of herds of wild horses against the lovely background of the Painted Desert make the plot seem of minor importance. The usual villain is present to provide the sinister element without which a picture could not be a western, but the characters on the whole behave like normal human beings and Noah Beery, Jr., is an engaging Stormy.

The song and dance brigade goes into politics and does it so well that the crooner-general is elected governor at the end of an hilarious campaign. The picture has a delightful tongue-in-the-cheek attitude towards officialdom and is all so gay and sprightly that one almost sighs for a régime under which we might be treated to Rubinoff's playing, the Yacht Club quartette, Paul White man's orchestra and Dick Powell's latest song hits instead of income taxes and potato control.

THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN » »

This is the story of a lonely, rich old woman whose interests center entirely in a pet dog and whose rudeness and maladjustment to society make her notorious. She is rescued from a car accident by the family of an Italian barber and taken to their home to be reared. Before this is accomplished, extras come out announcing that she has been kid napped, and the head of the family is horried to find himself implicated in a possible crime. He tries to induce his guest to leave, but knowing that her nephew is attempting to railroad her into an insane asylum in order to gain control of her fortune, she refuses, settles down with the family of the Italian barber, follows with grim pleasure the press reports and for the first time in her life knows what it is to win and to give human affection.
So far the story is appealing and real. It loses both these qualities when the old recluse is actually kidnapped from the barber's home by professional gangsters and taken to their hideout. The G-Men in action, their storming of the hideout and the wounding of the old lady's would-be rescuer, are the cheap claptrap of the usual ghoster plot and mar an otherwise delightful characterization.

TO BEAT THE BAND

Fred Keating, Eric Blore. Directed by Ben
Stoloff. From a story by George Marion,
Jr. Screen play by Rian James. R.K.O.

Another slapstick farce whose chief raison d'etre is a catchy song and dance specialty.
The story centers about a moron hero whose eccentric aunt leaves him her millions with the stipulation that within three days after her death he marry a widow. If he fails to meet this condition the fortune goes to the leader of a collegiate band. The broad comdy incidents which follow are concerned with the efforts of the hero and a designing woman lawyer to accomplish the marriage, and those of the bandmaster and his associates to prevent it. The humor is inoffensive but often boring and completely unlighted by wit. It will appeal only to those who enjoy the comedy of mere situation. One really excellent dance number and the evident enjoyment of the actors in the roles which they portray are the only sources of refreshment for the discriminative spectator.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL

Maurice Elvey. Gaumont-British.

The story "Transatlantic Tunnel" starts in England in the year 1945 when a young engineer, a dreamer, conceives the idea of uniting the two English speaking countries with a tunnel reaching from the United States to England, to insure peace or protection in case of war. The work is to start at each end simultaneously and meet in mid-ocean. Money being the prime factor in this undertaking, McAllen, the young engineer, having favor-ablely impressed Mr. Lloyd, a millionaire of far-reaching influence, brings together a group of financiers who can supply the funds for starting the tunnel. After much persuasion and the aid of Valaris, the beautiful daughter of Mr. Lloyd, the arrangements are made and the work started. The film thereafter depicts the tremendous hardships of engineering and the discouragements encountered by McAllen in keeping alive the interest and financial backing necessary to complete the project. Another angle of the plot is the domestic tragedy that comes to him when he is estranged from his wife and little son.

Gayne Whitman. Praesens Film Co., Zurich.

A film which brings the subject of greatest news interest within our range of vision can not fail to have some value for a large proportion of the public. A large map of the contested territory is flashed upon the screen, and then little by little the country of Ethiopia is revealed, as the Swiss aviator who takes the pictures swoops down upon deserts, mountains and villages, showing the dusky, barefooted inhabitants ready to die for their Emperor, who with his immediate family, gives the only evidence we see of European culture.

photography is excellent with many interest-

FEATURE FILMS

AH WILDERNESS

Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden, Aline MacMahon, Cecilia Parker, Spring Byington, Mickey Rooney. From the play by Eugene O'Neill. Screen play by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett. Direction by Clarence Brown. M-G-M.

In certain respects the theatre version of the comedy has an advantage over the screen production because naturally much of the dialogue has to be omitted in the picture and O'Neill's lines are so good that one is sorry to miss any of them. To offset this the mobility of the camera makes it possible to give a more intimate view of the lives of the people in their small town of horse and buggy days. There probably has never been a funnier scene from "way back when" than the high school graduation. The story is of a whole family, but the interest centers in Richard, soaring on wings of new-found mental freedom and romantic love, believing that no one can understand him but finding in the end that he has been perfectly understood by his old father who, himself, once trod the star and thorn strewn path of sensitive youth and still remembers. Both parts are beautifully done with Lionel Barrymore as the father and Eric Linden as the son. In fact the entire cast fits very naturally into the parts. Wallace Beery fills the comic and slightly pathetic role of the uncle whose addiction to drink assigns him to an ineffectual position in life. They are all people of yesterday, and yet their problems are those which arise with each succeeding generation and are very near to our hearts today.

BROADWAY HOSTESS

The spotlight falls on the torch-singer during a good part of the picture, and it is probably just as well, whether one cares for that art and Winifred Shaw as its exponent or not. The story is insincere, and it has questionable moral values, since the hero, Lucky Lorimer, gains sufficient prestige to marry the lovely heiress by operating a swanky gambling establishment and ruining her weak, drink-sodden brother. Probably the crowning absurdity of the play is Lucky’s companion, a loathsome creature devoid of manners and conversation, who is accepted without question in gilt-edged ball-rooms. The talents of Genevieve Tobin who plays the heiress are wasted in such a film.

DANGEROUS
Bette Davis, Franchot Tone, Margaret Lindsay. Story and screen play by Laird Doyle. Direction by Alfred E. Green. Warner Bros.

Out of a sense of gratitude for the inspiration she once was to him, a young man of high ideals saves a talented actress from the gutter. He distrusts the strange fascination she has for him, but to complete her rehabilitation, he is willing to sacrifice his own happiness and security. Caught in the web of her own spinning, the girl finds that she sincerely loves him. The tragic implications are apparent when she realizes she must pay for her selfishness with the price of her life happiness. The theme is one of involved social motives in which each character lives up to a certain sense of nobility. Bette Davis has previously demonstrated her skill in delineating a character which is at once fascinating and comprehensible. She handles the wide emotional arc of this role with intelligence and finesse.

The story is told swiftly and convincingly, and while it is not particularly happy, it compensates for this in interest and dramatic force.

I DREAM TOO MUCH

Lily Pons, chic and attractive, with her beautiful voice, interesting personality and flair for comedy is charming in this, her first motion picture. The plot is perhaps stereotyped but because of the original humor, novelty of Parisian settings and skill of the cast, this fact does not detract materially from its entertaining qualities. It is delightfully gay and musically exquisite. The voice of Miss Pons in the “Bell Song” from “Lakme” is brilliant, and she sings several less classical numbers which will have great popular appeal. Of these “The Jockey on the Carrousel” is particularly pleasing in music and settings. The story concerns a girl who revolts from the taxing work which her guardian thinks necessary to develop her voice to its maximum beauty. Longing for fun and a home of her own, she runs away and marries a temperamental composer. The ending is unique, clever and withal rather touching. This may be recommended as one of the best of the finer type of musical films.

THE LITTLEST REBEL

"The Littlest Rebel" will win your hearts because Shirley Temple is her winsome self in a stirring story of the Civil War. It concerns a little daughter of a Rebel Captain. She cannot understand why war must be, but she is a rebel through and through! Pathos, sentiment, laughter and tensely exciting moments are woven into an excellent plot. The supporting cast is exceedingly good. Shirley is charming in the costumes of the period, very skillful in the interpolated dances and delightful when singing her little songs, a great little trooper in a picture which has real appeal.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY
Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, Franchot Tone, Herbert Mundin, Eddie Quillan, Dudley Digges, Donald Crisp. From the book by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall. Direction by Frank Lloyd. M-G-M.

Through the trilogy written by Hall and Nordhoff, the story of the "Bounty" has become familiar to modern readers. This ship was the nucleus of rebellion against the inhuman discipline that obtained on board the British sailing vessels of a hundred and fifty years ago. According to historical documents, the "Bounty" left England in 1787 to procure a cargo of bread-fruit trees. On the return journey oppression reached the limits of human endurance, and the crew burst into mutiny. Those who were thrilled by the books will find that the film meets all expectations. It is a story of brutality, fierce courage, unquenchable hope, powerful drama against a wide sweep of sea and sky. Charles Laughton achieves a superb characterization as Captain Bligh. Gable and Tone give vivid performances, while the members of the crew are individuals not types; we learn to know them well. If the picture leaves any regret, it concerns the scenes on Tahiti which are so sensuous and languid that they mar the tone and retard the tempo of the film. On the whole the direction is outstanding. One will long remember the beauty of the rigging against the sky, the ship plunging through the troughs of the waves and the men who struggle against tremendous forces to escape degradation and the hand of death.

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN

This is strictly English comedy of the kind which delights the hearts of music hall audiences and is very good in its way. Cicely Courtneidge is irresistible in the part of April Maye, singing comedienne from the provinces. She is aided by, and in turn becomes the guiding star of the scapegrace Major who always does the wrong thing in a chivalrous manner and hence is known as The Perfect Gentleman. The fact that the Major's son is a very serious-minded young vicar perpetually flouted by his father adds to many situations. Heather Angel is lovely in a rather minor part.

PETER IBETSON

It takes a certain type of mind to enjoy fantasy, and persons who have no liking for it will probably neither understand nor enjoy "Peter Ibbetson." Closely following du Maurier's famous book, its theme is the separation of the spiritual from the physical self, illustrated in the dream life of two lovers who are actually kept apart by circumstances but whose spirits meet in a realm of unreality where they lead a beautiful and happy life together. The suggestion of the spiritual's transcending the physical is carried still further in the intimation that they are to be together forever after death has released them from their mortal limitations. As the Duchess of Towers, Ann Harding is exquisitely lovely. Gary Cooper as Peter Ibbetson may or may not fit one's preconceived idea of the character but he gives an artistic and sincere performance. As always in an attempt to present a world beyond the one we live in, the film's chances of success depend principally upon the spectator's power of imagination. To the sympathetic audience it will be an illuminating experience.

REMEMBER LAST NIGHT

Never since the picture industry took the pledge to mend its ways has there been a film such as this, in which all the main characters awake in a strange apartment unable to recall what occurred on the previous night. An intricate murder mystery develops, but even death fails to sober the revelers who go right on being debonair and devastatingly funny and indecently drunk in gorgeous Park Avenue settings. Marked with cheap, blatant sophistication, unpleasant in many details, this is harmful because of low standards of marriage and life in general.

RENDEZVOUS

In wartime the work of experts in deciphering codes and constructing new ones impervious to the best brains of the enemy's secret service is often far more important than spectacular achievements at the front, and it may be equally dangerous. Such is the theme of this film. The story so cleverly combines swift action and a high tension plot with gaiety of approach and spontaneity of dialogue, that one is kept alert from beginning to end but never afflicted with frayed nerves. William Powell is at his best in the part of the chief code authority, and Rosalind Russell shows an aptitude for comedy. One may doubt that a niece of a War Department official could have potent influence in appointments, but that may pass as a minor point. The picture covers an interesting subject and it is well handled.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

Gene Raymond, Margaret Callahan, Eric Blore, Grant Mitchell, Moroni Olsen, Emma Dunn. From the novel by Earl Derr Biggers. Direction by William Hamilton and Edward Killy. R.K.O.

Amusing mystery of seven key-holders coming to Baldpate Inn in the dead of winter, all for different reasons and all becoming involved in the salvaging of $200,000 which has been hidden in the safe in the Inn. The picture begins in a railway station with Gene Raymond as Magee asking his way to Baldpate Inn. Mystery begins at once by the introduction of Margaret Callahan as Mary, a young, attractive woman, weeping by the fire in the station. Later she appears of course at the Inn. One by one the characters enter the Inn to the accompaniment of eerie gales from the snowy outdoors, and the story revolves around getting the money out of the safe and into the rightful owner's hands. The picture is well cast and moves rapidly with good dialogue and many dramatic scenes. However, suspense in the picture seems carried too long, whereas in the play it did not seem so, and dialogue is carried forward so rapidly that confusion results toward the climax. Whereas the stage play seemed, years ago, vividly stimulating and hilariously entertaining, the picture seems by comparison a little trite. This is no doubt due to a theme overworked through the years, and which by this time, has lost some of its freshness and vividness. It is nevertheless very good entertainment.

Goaded by a heartlessly extravagant family to seek refuge in prison on an income tax charge, a dying plutocrat turns over the guardianship of the members of his family to an ex-gangster who cuts them down to an allowance of twenty-five dollars a week and subjects the gilded heroine to a course of treatment second only to "The Taming of the Shrew." It is a hopelessly incredible plot too melodramatic to be comic and too ridiculous to be taken seriously. Poor

So RED THE ROSE » »
Randolph Scott, Margaret Sullivan, Walter Connolly, Elizabeth Patterson, Dickie Moore, Janet Beecher. From the novel by Stark Young. Direction by King Vidor. Paramount.

Lovely photography, glamorous settings and costumes, the singing of negro songs and the tragedy and romance of Civil War days make this picture one which will undoubtedly appeal to the general public. Those who have read the book will miss the novelist's pain-staking care in presenting as a background for war the beauty and gaiety of pre-bellum days in the south, for the audience is plunged almost immediately into soldier's farewells and bulletins of death without being really acquainted with the characters in their normal mode of living. Thus, as it is presented on the screen, the story becomes, to the analytical spectator, less a romance of the pitiful war torn south than an exposition of men's motives in going to war. In the beginning we are shown a peaceful family group on the day when they welcome home the young son and his college friend on vacation. That same night the call to arms is sounded, and, in the months that follow, though they have born no personal malice against the north, the men of the household are impelled by love of adventure, desire to avenge a friend's death, sense of duty or war hysteria, one by one to join the army. The women, a little boy and one faithful slave are left alone to face desolation and bereavement. One might find in this picture a challenge to future generations to adhere to a conviction that normal men do not really want to kill one another. In spite of its pictorial beauty it leaves the beholder depressed and wondering if little boys must always grow up to go to war.

THE TALE OF TWO CITIES » »

To many people "The Tale of Two Cities" means Sidney Carton, and after seeing the picture one is even more impressed by the fact that it is his story more than it is either a romance of young Darnay, the French Aristocrat, and his beloved Lucy Manette or an historical novel of the French Revolution. As Carton, the ne'er do-well lawyer, Ronald Colman matches wits with his legal opponents, drinks to forget his shortcomings, falls in love with Lucy and makes the supreme sacrifice beneath the guillotine. He is completely in character every minute of the picture and makes Dickens' hero a still more vivid personality than we have previously known. In its wealth of detail and pain-taking fidelity to the atmosphere, settings costumes and customs of the period, the picture is most interesting. The mob scenes and the dreadful conditions among the poor of Paris are almost too horribly real. The characters are well cast and adhere closely to our conception of them as Dickens wrote them into his novel. We feel that the picture would be improved by cutting and smoothing of rough edges, and no doubt there will be some changes made before it is ready for public showing. It is spectacular, moving, intensely interesting but does not quite hit the bull's-eye of artistic achievement. It is made up of many excellent parts without in itself being a unit of excellence.

TWO FACES

Wallace Ford, Brian Donlevy, Phyllis Brooks, Erik Rhodes. Direction by Christy Cabanne. R.K.O.

Amusing, fast moving and full of surprises, this picture is entertaining without calling for any intellectual concentration. It takes its name from the fact that a gangster has his face altered by plastic surgery and then goes to Hollywood to become a motion picture actor. Complications in the lives of actors and studio executives result, and a rousing, melodramatic scene ends the picture when the gangster shows his true colors. Added interest is derived from an intimate view of backstage procedure in the studio.

THE WIDOW FROM MONTE CARLO

Restive under the restraining influence of her relatives, Inez, a young widow, steps out alone one evening and finds love. Incidental to this, a social climber achieves her ultimate desire by entertaining a duchess. It has come to our attention that this picture was adapted from a play, the basal theme of which concerned the attempts of one of the nouveaux riches to gain social recognition. In the picture, the original theme becomes subservient to the more immediate and distinctly Hollywood need of creating a vehicle for a star. Intended as a farce, it is interpreted as such by the cast with the exception of the leading actors, who play their parts straight. This conflicting sense of dramatic values leaves it a bewildering study in inanity. To the actor's credit let it be said that they did try to make it amusing—they tried so hard that one became conscious of the drive without seeing the result.

Waste of time

YOUR UNCLE DUDLEY

Uncle Dudley has a room full of cups donated by a grateful Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club, Lions, etc., etc.—all for civic efforts. He is the town's easy mark! But he can't cash in on his social service. He can't get married to his sweetheart who has waited five years because he has to support a sister-in-law with two children. Sister is shrewishly caustic because she yearns for a trip to Europe to launch an unwilling daughter musically. And so this lovable, silly chap struggles on until circumstances force him to strike out for himself. It is a typical Horton vehicle and characterization, mildly amusing but without either subtlety or novelty.

SHORT SUBJECTS

CARTOONS

THREE ORPHAN KITTENS. United Artists. This is one of the best Disneys ever made. Three small kittens come into a house out of a blizzard and frolic from one adventure to another, even setting the player piano into action in their mischievous exuberance. Irresistible fun for all ages.

SUMMERTIME. Rep. Charming color fantasy, revealing Pan emerging from a snow man and calling flowers and animals from their long winter's sleep. Then is seen the ground hog's shadow, delaying summer for a while. Family and children.

HONEY LAND. M-G-M. Harman-Ising color film of the life of the bees, featuring their triumph over their enemy the spider. A very clever cartoon for family and children.

LET'S RING DOORBELLS. Columbia. Scrappy and his pal are punished for ringing doorbells by being shut up in a building with a multitude of bells, from which there is no escape until they discover the right bell. Amusing. Family and children.

ADVENTURES OF POPEYE. Para. A small boy defeated by a bully, is encouraged by Popeye, who shows him a book of his own successful combats. Family.

TECHED IN THE HAID. A cheap and silly color cartoon of a lazy father, a hard-working mother and her tribulations in caring for six babies.

JUNE BRIDE. Fox Terrytoon. Slightly romantic and rather foolish tale of a cat who comes to win the farmer's feline, besieges the house with companions and wins his lady-love. Fair for family.

ALLADIN'S LAMP. Fox. This is a disappointing cartoon with an Oriental setting, showing a harem in consternation when Alladin flies towards it on his magic carpet. Poor.

MOOLY MOO AND BUTTERFLIES. R.K.O. A charming color fantasy, wherein Molly Moo continues her beneficent acts by rescuing a band of butterflies from a collector. Excellent for family and children.

THREE BEARS. Rep. Goldilocks, playing Hide and Seek, suddenly finds herself in the home of the Three Bears, which she explores until she is discovered and put to flight. Good for family and children.

MOLLY MOO COW AND INDIANS. R.K.O. A cow and two ducks escape from a covered wagon and befriend an Indian squaw and her child, who in return give them assistance in their troubles. A color cartoon suitable for family.

BETTY BOOP AND HENRY. Paramount. This is far above the usual Betty Boop cartoon. Betty leaves Henry, the familiar child of the comic strip, in charge of a pet shop, promising him a dog in return for his services. Fine for family and children.

MUSICAL

WAY OUT WEST. Fox Entertainment at a Western dance hall, featuring two girl dancers, also a man who dances and the Cabin Kids who are the best of the lot. Fair.

COUNTRY SIDE MELODY. Paramount. Another Robert Bruce film in color, showing beautiful English hunting scenes and gardens with fine music. Excellent for all ages.

PHIL SPITALNY AND GIRL BAND. Vita. More music from this band, also scenes from night clubs. Rather good. Adults.

PARADE OF MAESTROS. Paramount. This shows the different methods of directing used by such leaders as Red Nichols, Deutsch and Grofe, with many selections of their music. Excellent. Family.

MUSICAL MEMORIES. Paramount. Color film. Two old people sit by the fire looking through a stereoptican and recalling the days when such songs as "Annie Rooney," "Good Old Summertime" and "Silver Threads Among the Gold" were the hits of the day; the tunes are revived one by one. Very good. Family.

COMEDY

THE ROUNDER. Prin. One of Charlie Chaplin's earlier films which is funny and interesting historically. Fun for family.

OUR GANG FOLLIES OF 1936. M-G-M. With Pinky McFarland as impresario the Gang puts on a very entertaining penny show. New faces are added to the cast and all are good. Fine for children and family.

GREAT AMERICAN PIE CO. M-G-M. Chic Sale enlivens the old Butler story of the rival pie men who seek to corner the pie trade. Good fun. Family.

SPORT

HOLD THAT LINE. Fox. Unusually good pictures of football with a talk explaining the difference between college and professional tactics. Family.

GYMNASTICS, M-G-M. An exhibition of remarkable gymnastic training by the members of the American Athletic Union with comments by Pete Smith. Excellent. Family.

FISH FROM HELL, F. W. Remarkable photographs of deep sea fishing along the Mexican coast, including a thrilling combat between a whale and a sword-fish. Instructive talk. Family.

FOOTBALL TEAMWORK. M-G-M. Pete Smith gives a very interesting talk illustrated by good pictures of various forms of football from the kind played by small boys to that of the powerful teams. Family. Children.

FEMININE INVASION. Columbia. An amazing picture of women athletes, performing rigorous feats ordinarily associated with very strong men. Family.

WATER SPORTS. M-G-M. Thrilling description of water sports by Pete Smith adds to the pleasure of the beautiful photography. Family and children.

THE SPORTING NETWORK. Paramount. Ted Husing explains how hook-ups and broadcasts of champion athletic events become "sport parade of the air." Excellent for all.

GENTLEMAN'S SPORT. R.K.O. Bill Corum explains that if he had a favorite sport it might be horse-racing, billiards, pigeon shooting, air-planing, speed-boat racing or polo. Appropriate illustrations. Excellent for all ages.

TRAVEL

WEST INDIES CRUISE. Fox. On the route of the old clipper ships we are taken to the West Indies, where we are treated to fine views of the various countries with ruins of old buildings and glimpses of their industries. Family and children.

BEAUTIFUL BANFF AND LAKE LOUISE. M-G-M. A Fitzpatrick film with very lovely color pictures of these Canadian Rockies resorts. Excellent for all.

SUNDAY SPORTS IN MEXICO. Fox. This is a charming film of the diversions possible on a Sunday in Mexico. It shows the throng emerging from the great cathedral and scattering to follow different impulses, some to attend the polo game or a rodeo, some to ride in an automobile on the splendid boulevards, some to drift among the flower boats of Xochimilco. Excellent for family.

ARGENTINE ARGOSY. Fox. Fine photographic studies of Buenos Aires, the Pampas, Ignazu Falls and the fine ranch homes boasting every luxury. All ages.

LAND OF EVANGELINE. R.K.O. Beautiful photography combined with an interesting description of the land of Acadia. Excellent for all.

VARIETY

BEACH MASTERS. R.K.O. Amazing film of Mist Island in the Behring Sea, where every spring the bull seals come followed by the cows and where for the four subsequent months the island is overrun by them and their shiny pups.

HOW TO SLEEP, M-G-M. An exposition of the art of sleeping, showing correct positions and disturbances. Clever comments by Robert Benchley. Family.

A CAPITAL IDEA. R.K.O. A conducted tour through the city of Washington by the Easy Aces. Good. Family.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL No. 4. Paramount. This contains descriptions of jewelry made to order by the famous Cartier, pictures of quaint and lovely old Charleston, and a series of Latin-American songs and dances. All interesting. Family.

ALL AMERICAN DRAWBACK. Vita. With a puppet as the lead, real actors put on this playlet of football failure and success. Amusing. Family.

STARS OF TO-MORROW. Col. A well arranged picture of work done by amateur entertainers. Family.

MARCH OF TIME No. 8. R.K.O. Subjects covered: work of Bergoff, the professional strike-breaker, the endeavors of Darling to save the wild bird life of America through federal bird refuges, presidential possibilities of the Republicans, showing Herbert Hoover as the power in the background, also a glimpse of Farley still confident of the success of the Democrats. Up-to-date and interesting.

VOICE OF EXPERIENCE No. 5. Col. A lugubrious story of a man who shields his son who has embezzled because he would not take sage advice. Only fair.

A WORLD WITHIN. R.K.O. Easy Aces sponsor pictures of the foreign quarters of New York, showing people who hail from China, Bavaria, Paris and Italy. Good for family and children.

SPORTS IN JAPAN. Prin. Japan Pictorial No. 4. This gives views of the Japanese in various Eastern and Western sports. Excellent for all.

CORMORANT FISHING. Prin. Japan Pictorial No. 2. Marvelous pictures of the training of cormorants as fisher-birds. Shows the festive occasion when lovely ladies go to see the sport at night. Entertaining for all.

MAJOR BOWES' AMATEUR. All the amateurs give creditable performances. Very good. Family.

STORY OF THE U. S. COAST GUARD. This holds exceptional interest. Splendid pictures of the Coast Guard and their prowess. Very good explanations. Family.

LUCKY STARS. Paramount. Lynn Overmann explains how screen tests are made with actual photographs to illustrate. Interesting for all.

SPRING NIGHT. Paramount. A ballet in dramatic form, in which a young girl enraptured with the spring moonlight, falls asleep and dreams that she dances with the garden statue which has come to life. Excellent. Adults.

CAMERA HUNTERS. Vita. Wild life in the U.S.A. Mountain goats are pictured as well as alligators, horn toads, fauns, grouse, monkeys, snakes, bears, beavers and ducks. Well taken and interesting for all.

VOICE OF EXPERIENCE No. 4. The Voice saves an innocent man accused of the murder of his wife from an end in the electric chair. Too cruelly realistic for anyone but adults.
